PREFACE

EARLY in the history of Assyriology Professor Eberhard Schrader, of Berlin, published his Keilinschriften und das Alte Testament (Giessen, 1872), which appeared in a second edition rewritten and doubled in size (Giessen, 1883), and was then translated into English by the Rev. Owen C. Whitehouse (London, 1885). In this great book the Assyrian and Babylonian inscription material illustrative of the Old Testament was collected under the biblical passages in transliteration and translation. In German or in English dress this book went everywhere, every student of Hebrew or of Assyrian consulted it, every Old Testament commentator quoted from it or made reference to it; its influence was incalculable. The rapid progress of exploration, decipherment, and explanation soon left it antiquated, and the eagerly desired new edition appeared, entirely rewritten by Professors Heinrich Zimmern and Hugo Winckler (Berlin, 1902), and upon a new plan. In this new edition, far more learned than the former and crowded with matter of high importance, suggestive, brilliant, instructive, the original texts, as Schrader had given them, were omitted and their place supplied by elaborate discussion of all the questions involved. The loss of the inscription material was partially supplied by the exceedingly useful Keilinschriftliches Textbuch zum Alten Testament by Professor Winckler (Leipzig, first edition, 1892; second, 1903; third, 1909), which gave in transliteration and translation the important historical and mythological texts necessary to the understanding of the Old Testament.

Shortly after the publication of the third edition of Schrader's book I began the collection and translation of inscriptions with the purpose of supplying to English readers a complete Corpus of all the Assyrian, Babylonian, and Persian inscriptions which are parallel to or illustrative of the Old Testament. I had then no idea that it would grow to so great a size, or that its preparation would occupy so long a series of years, or that the labor involved would be so arduous. I should hardly have dared to undertake with a light heart a task which has taxed my energies during many an hour between lectures, and absorbed nearly all my summer holidays since it began. It has, indeed, cost so much that my early hopes and enthusiasm for it have slipped away, and, like Johnson with his Dictionary, "I therefore dismiss it with frigid tranquillity, having little to fear or hope from censure or from praise."

The plan involves a number of very different kinds of scholarship, in all of which no man dare pretend equally to excel. In the first place, the texts are all translated into English, and they come from almost every type of cuneiform literature, and every type has its specialists. For the thoroughness and skill with which this fundamental task has been done I can only claim to have spent many years upon the historical and chronological texts as a specialty, and to have worked diligently and independently and sought carefully to know all that my colleagues have produced on the other fields. I hope that the translations represent fairly well the present state of the science of Assyriology, and I have confidence that experts will find not a few cases in which progress has been made beyond previous editions of others. The transcriptions are printed to make possible the control of the translations without immediate recourse to the widely scattered original texts. They will be useful, not only to those who have actually studied Assyrian, but almost equally to those who know Hebrew or other Semitic languages. There are, I fear, some uneven places in the transliteration, ever a pitfall in all languages, but they will probably serve sufficiently their practical purpose. The introductions, especially those which deal with the historical sections, are intended to enable the ordinary reader to find the relationship between the text which follows and the period or situation to which it belongs. I could easily have made them much more extensive had I chosen to thresh out every theory and make every possible comparison with the Old Testament. The purpose of the book was, however, very different. My idea was to supply the materials and let the student exercise his own judgment upon them. It would be a most useful reformation in much of our academic, and even of our graduate teaching, if our pupils were compelled to do a little more for themselves. Here, assembled in one book, are the texts, here the absolutely necessary fundamental materials for the understanding of their bearing, and here also references to the publications of the original cuneiform texts, and to the most important discussions already held concerning them. I venture to hope that professors, teachers, and preachers who wish to lecture upon the manifold relations between Palestine and Babylonia and Assyria will here find the means by which they may introduce themselves, and especially their pupils, directly to the sources. I believe that this book contains the largest body of cuneiform literature yet assembled in any language for the illustration of the Old Testament.

I have had much encouragement and some help from colleagues on both sides of the sea during the years spent upon the work. It would be impossible to name them all, and it may seem invidious to mention any. It ought, however, to be said that Professor Stephen Langdon, of Oxford, has read in manuscript most of the religious texts and has pointed out a number of amendments and improvements. My friend, Professor Brünnow, of Princeton, has read the whole book in proof and has helped me in many places to find errors and inconsistencies which a mind polarized by so many rereadings of the same matter had failed to observe. I know of no way adequately to express my gratitude for these services. As I now set the book on its journey I find myself wishing that others had seen this or that within its covers before the type had placed it beyond correction. This desire comes to me the more readily because in the writing of it I have silently corrected literally hundreds of mistakes made by my predecessors in translations and in transcriptions. I may surely anticipate the discovery by others of many mistakes of my own. But, as Johnson said (it is surely time to quote him again), "I soon found that it is too late to look for instruments, when the work calls for execution, and that whatever abilities I had brought to my task, with those I must finally perform it. To deliberate whenever I doubted, to inquire whenever I was ignorant, would have protracted the undertaking without end, and, perhaps, without much improvement; for I did not find by my first experiments that what I had not of my own was easily to be obtained; I saw that one inquiry only gave occasion to another, that book referred to book, that to search was not always to find, and to find was not always to be informed; and that thus to pursue perfection was, like the first inhabitants of Arcadia, to chase the sun, which, when they had reached the hill where he seemed to rest, was still beheld at the same distance from them."

My obligations to the books and papers which have been published in this field before me are acknowledged with almost meticulous scrupulousness on every page. I have been so fearful of robbing somebody's treasure that I have printed references of acknowledgment in many cases where I had already reached the same conclusion long before. If I have overlooked anyone in this distribution of footnote compliments, here's an apology to him, and a letter will follow as soon as my attention is drawn to the matter.

The book was practically completed long ago, and its publication delayed by the absurd demands made upon American scholars by the machinery amid which many of them are compelled to sacrifice their larger usefulness. The delay has, however, permitted me to compare my translations with the admirable work of Professor Arthur Ungnad in Gressmann's Altorientalische Texte und Bilder, to my profit in many cases and to my comfort in all. I am under special obligations also to Professor Ungnad's treatment of the Hammurapi code in his joint work with Professor Köhler. I doubt whether this work of his has yet found adequate appreciation at the hands of other scholars. I have adopted so many suggestions from him that it seemed impossible to acknowledge every one of them in foot notes.

Earnestly and eagerly do I hope that the book may prove useful, may help some inquiring mind, or—most wonderful boon—may rouse some young mind to an interest in, or even to lifelong devotion to, the study of the ancient Orient. "When I am animated by this wish" (here is Johnson again to relieve the tedium of this long preface), "I look with pleasure on my book, however defective, and deliver it to the world with the spirit of a man that has endeavoured well."

MYTHOLOGICAL TEXTS

I. THE CREATION

1. THE STORY OF CREATION¹

When above the heaven was not named,
And beneath the earth bore no name,
And the primeval Apsu, who begat them
And Mummu and Tiamat, the mother of them all,— 5 Their waters were mingled together,
And no field was formed, no marsh seen,
When no one of the gods had been called into being,
And none bore a name, and no destinies [were fixed]
Then were created the gods in the midst of [heaven], 10 Lakhmu and Lakhamu were called into being . . .
Ages increased . . .

¹ The text is published by King, in Cuneiform Texts, xiii. See further for additional fragments, King, The Seven Tablets of Creation, where also are to be found transcription, translation, and a valuable commentary. Earlier editions, which are still valuable, are Heinrich Zimmern, in Gunkel, Schöpfung und Chaos, pp. 401ff.; Delitzsch, Das Babylonische Welterschöpfungsepos. (Abhandlungen der Sächsischen Gesellschaft der Wissenschaften, Bd. xvii, 1896); Jensen, in Schrader's Keilinschriftliche Bibliothek, vi, 1, pp. 2ff.; Winckler, Keilinschriftliches Textbuch zum Alten Testament, 3te Auf., pp. 94ff.; Bezold, Die Schöpfungslegende (Kleine Texte für theolog. Vorlesungen und Uebungen. Litzmann, Heft 7, Bonn, 1904); P. Dhorme, Choix de Textes Religieux Assyro-Babyloniens, pp. 2ff. The literature in explanation of this difficult text and of its relations to the religion of Israel is very extensive. The following may be mentioned: Jastrow, The Religion of Babylonia and Assyria (1898), pp. 407ff., and Die Religion Babyloniens und Assyriens (1904-1912); A. They consulted on a plan concerning the gods, their sons.

And unto Tiamat, the brilliant, he spake a word:

By day I cannot rest, I cannot lie down
I will destroy their way, I will [disperse them] down.”

When Tiamat heard these words,
She was furious, and cried for
She went into a terrible anger
She conceived evil in her heart:
- 45 “All that which we have made, we will destroy
Lo, their ways are become evil, and let us
Mummu answered, and gave counsel unto Apsu,
An hostile counsel was the counsel of Mummu “Come, their way is strong, but destroy thou it.

lie down.”

Before his fathers, he took his place as sovereign.
'Thou art most honored among the great gods,
Thy destiny is beyond compare, thy command is
Anu.

- 5 O Marduk, thou art most honored among the great gods,
Thy destiny is beyond compare, thy command is Anu.

In all time thy command shall not be changed,
To exalt and to abase lie in thy hand.
Established shall be the word of thy mouth, resistless thy command,

- 10 None among the gods shall transgress thy limits.
Maintenance is the desire of the shrines of the gods,
In their sanctuary shall thy sanctuary be established.
O Marduk, thou art our avenger.
We give thee lordship over the whole world.

Thy weapon shall not lose its power, it shall break in pieces thy foe.

O lord defend the life of him that trusteth in thee.

But, as for the god, who undertook evil, pour out his life."

Then they placed among them a garment,

20 And unto Marduk, their first born, they spoke:

Thy destiny, O lord, is supreme among the gods,

To destroy and to create, when thou dost command, it shall be fulfilled.

Thy command shall destroy the garment,

And if thou dost command, the garment shall be intact."

25 Then he spoke with his mouth, the garment was destroyed,

He commanded again, the garment was restored.

When the gods, his fathers, beheld the efficacy of his word

They rejoiced, they paid homage, "Marduk is king."

They bestowed upon him the sceptre, the throne, the palu,¹ ¹The palu was some badge of authority. King translates 'ring,' but we have no proof of its correctness.

That none might err or go astray
 He set the station of Bel and Ea by his side.
 He opened gates on both sides,

10 He made strong the bolt on the left and on the right.

In the midst thereof he fixed the zenith;
 The Moon-god he caused to shine forth, to him confided the night.

He appointed him, a being of the night, to determine the days;

Every month, without ceasing, like a crown he made him, saying,

15 "At the beginning of the month, when thou shinest on the land

Thou shalt show the horns, to determine six days,
 And on the seventh day let the tiara disappear.

² The names of these gods are written in Sumerian, which are here literally translated.

³ Arazu, an unknown god, the word means "prayer," and Ungnad suggests that it may be prayer personified.

⁴ Ashnan and Lakhar are gods of vegetation, Siris probably god of wine. Ningishzida is the earlier days (time of Gudea), one of the chief gods, but he sank later to be the servant of the gods. He is known also as the father of Tammuz.

⁵ Unknown god, the reading of the name, as also of the following one being quite uncertain. Ungnad suggests that they may be the gods of brewing and of cooking, but there is no evidence for this.

4. THE CREATION OF THE MOON (AND THE SUN)¹

When the gods Anu, Ellil and Ea, the [great] gods, Through their unchangeable counsel and powerful commands,

Fixed the crescent of the moon,

To cause the new-moon to shine forth, to create the month,

5 Signs for heaven and earth they fixed.

The new moon, which was created in heaven with majesty,

In the midst of heaven arose.

Version. When Anu, Ellil and Ea

The great gods, through their unchangeable counsel,

¹ The text is published and translated by King, The Seven Tablets of Creation, i, pp. 124ff., and ii, pl. xlix. The tablet is a student's practice, or exercise, and contains on one side seven lines extracted from some Sumerian composition, and on the other seven lines from a similar Babylonian composition, which is called "Version," though it is not a version or translation of the Sumerian text. The passages are also translated by Ungnad in Gressmann, Altorientalische Texte und Bilder, i, 26. The translation here given, especially the Sumerian, is indebted to Langdon for useful suggestions.

5. ANOTHER VERSION OF THE CREATION OF THE WORLD BY MARDUK (SO-CALLED "BILINGUAL OF CREATION")¹

This interesting text formed merely the introduction to an incantation which was intended to be recited in honor of Ezida, the great temple of Nabû at Borsippa" (King). It was found, in 1882, in the ruins of Abu-Habba by Hormuzd Rassam, and is preserved both in Sumerian and in Assyrian. Though so different from the main story of the creation, it belongs to the same set of political ideas which made use of ancient religious material to justify the position of Marduk at the head of the Babylonian pantheon.

¹The text is published by King, in Cuneiform Texts, xiii, pp. 35ff. It is translated by Pinches, Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, xxiii (new series), pp. 393ff.; Zimmern, in Gunkel's Schöpfung und Chaos, pp. 419f.; Jensen, Keilinschriftliche Bibliothek, vi, p. 38f.; King, The Seven Tablets of Creation, i, pp. 130ff.; Dhorme, Choix de Textes Religieux Assyro-Babyloniens, pp. 83ff.; Winckler, Keilinschriftliches Textbuch zum Alten Testament, 3te Auf., pp. 91, 92; Ungnad, in Gressmann, Altorientalische Texte und Bilder, i, pp. 27, 28.

When the middle of the sea was a water basin;
In those days Eridu was made, E-sagil was built,
E-sagil, where in the midst of the deep the god
Lugal-dul-azaga dwelt,
Babylon was made, and E-sagil was finished,

The holy city, the dwelling of the heart's desire, they proclaimed supreme.

6. THE CREATION OF CATTLE AND BEASTS¹

This small Assyrian text, which probably belonged to Ashurbanipal's library, refers only incidentally to the creation of cattle and beasts, its main object being to chronicle the creation of two small creatures, who were formed by Nin-igi-azag at the time when the larger animals were made. George Smith thought that this text might have formed a part of the seventh tablet of the Creation series, but King has shown this to be incorrect.

When the gods in their assembly had made the

7. AN INCANTATION AGAINST TOOTHACHE¹

This text is here given, though it belongs properly with the literature of magic, because it begins with a cosmological introduction which purports to give the life history of the worm that causes toothache.

- After Anu [had created the Heavens]
 The Heavens created [the Earth],
 The Earth created the Rivers,
 The Rivers created the Canals,
 5 The Canals created the Morass,
 The Morass created the Worm.
 Then came the Worm weeping before Shamash,
 Before Ea came her tears:—
 “What wilt thou give (me) for my food,
 10 What wilt thou give me to destroy?”
 “I will give thee ripe figs,
 (And) jam of great figs.”
 “What are these ripe figs to me,
 And jam of great figs? . . .
 15 Exalt me and between the teeth

8. THE ASSYRIAN COSMOLOGY

The cosmology of the Assyrians is rooted in the cosmology of the Babylonians, and developed quite naturally after the separation of the two peoples began. In Assyria the chief god of Babylon, Marduk, is displaced and the national god, Ashur, takes his place just as Marduk had in earlier times displaced Ellil in Babylonia. The oldest form of the name of Ashur was Ashir, but when speculation and comparison of the older literature began he was identified with Anshar (Creation, i, line 12; see p. 4). Unhappily, no complete Assyrian cosmological text has come down to us, and we can only illustrate their beliefs by two fragments:

See also Dhorme, Choix de Textes Religieux Assyro-Babyloniens, pp. 90ff., and Ungnad, in Gressmann, Altorientalische Texte und Bilder, i, p. 29.

3. AN ASSYRIAN BUILDING INSCRIPTION WITH COSMOLOGICAL MATERIAL

A building inscription¹ of Sennacherib (705–681 B. C.) contains some cosmological references which supply useful hints concerning the development of the faith of Ashur. The text describes a bronze door erected by the king in the New Year's festival house at Ashur (Kal'at Shergat), which has recently been discovered and laid bare by the Deutsche Orientgesellschaft.

(5) A door of gleaming red bronze, which like a . . . the work of the god of the forge² (6) I caused to be made by my artistic skill; a representation of Ashur, when he went to battle into the sea,³ (7) as he bore the bow, while he drove upon the chariot and let loose the storm flood (8) and a representation of Amurru, who drove with him as charioteer, according to the command of Shamash and Adad (9) given me in haruspication⁴ (him) I graved upon that door. The gods who go before him (10) and go behind him, who drive in chariots and go afoot, [also] as they before Ashur (11) are ordered in line of battle and behind Ashur are

¹ The text is published by Meissner and Rost, Die Bauinschriften Sannheribs (1893), Plate 16, and translated pp. 98ff., and again by Zimmern, Zum babylonischen Neujahrsfest (Berichte der königlich Sächsischen Gesellschaft der Wissenschaften, 1906), Band 58, pp. 126ff., and by Ungnad in Gressmann, i, p. 29f.

² The god of the forge or smithy is Ea.

³ That is, Tiamat, the name both of the sea and of the great being in the sea.

⁴ Probably divination by the examination of the liver; see Jastrow, Die Religion Babyloniens und Assyriens, ii, pp. 138ff.

9 AN ADDRESS TO THE RIVER OF CREATION¹

O thou River, who didst create all things,
When the great gods dug thee out,
They set prosperity upon thy banks,
Within thee Ea, the king of the Deep, created his dwelling,

- 5 A deluge unparalleled to thee they gave.
Fire and wrath, and splendor, and terror
Have Ea and Marduk presented unto thee.
Thou judgest the cause of mankind.
O great river, exalted river, river of sanctuaries.

¹ Published and translated by King, The Seven Tablets of Creation, i, 128, 129, 200, 201, and translated also by Ungnad in Gressmann, Altorientalische Texte und Bilder, i, 30, 31. The passage is found upon two duplicate tablets and is used to introduce two different incantations. See King's note, op. cit., p. 128, and compare Sayce, Hibbert Lectures, p. 403. As King suggests, "this mystical river of creation was evidently suggested by the Euphrates."

II. THE DRAGON AND DEMONS

1. ELLIL AND THE LABBU

A curious variation of the creation myth is afforded by a small text which gives a story of a contest between Ellil and a great sea monster, whose name may be read Labbu, that is, Lion. The name might also be read Kalbu (dog), or even Ribbu; if this latter reading could be authenticated, it would form a most interesting parallel to the Rahab of the Old Testament (Job 9. 13; 26. 12; Psa. 89. 10; Isa. 30. 7).

In this fragment the monster is represented as of great size, for his length is fifty biru¹ (line 8). The biru is the distance that may be covered in two hours' travel, about six or seven miles, and this would make the dragon three hundred or three hundred and fifty miles long, and the height which it reared the head out of the water six or seven miles. (So King.) The blood of the dragon flowed for three years when slain (line 8, reverse), which seems quite consistent with this estimate of its size.

¹The ideogram is KAS-PU, which is to be read biru as Landsberger has just shown. See Zeitschrift für Assyriologie, xxv, 385, 386.

2. THE LEGEND OF THE SEVEN EVIL DEMONS¹

Raging storms, evil gods are they

Ruthless demons, who in heaven's vault were created, are they,

Workers of evil are they,

They lift up the head to evil, every day to evil

² The evil gods darken the moon by an eclipse, Shamash helping them by withdrawing his light from the moon, and Adad by sending cloudy weather.

Ishtar, with Anu the king moved into a shining dwelling, exercising dominion over the heavens, tinuous sense]

Day and night he was dark [i. e., Sin] in the dwelling of his dominion he sat not down,

Unto Ea, in the ocean, announce it.”

- 55 Nusku, the word of his lord there announced,
 Ea in the ocean heard that word,
 He bit his lip and filled his mouth with wailing,
 Ea called his son Marduk, and gave him the message:
 "Go, my son Marduk,
 60 Son of a prince, the gleaming Sin has been sadly darkened in heaven,
 His darkening is seen in the heavens,
 The seven evil gods, death dealing, fearless, are they,
 The seven evil gods, like a flood, rush on, the land they fall upon, do they,
 Against the land, like a storm, they rise, do they,
 65 Before the gleaming Sin, they set themselves angrily,
 The mighty Shamash, Adad the warrior they brought on their side."¹

III. THE MYTH OF ADAPA.¹

This myth is preserved upon four fragments, three of which once belonged to the library of the Assyrian

¹ The texts of the four tablets are published as follows: 1. V. Scheil, Recueil de Travaux relatifs à la Philologie et à l'Archéologie Égyptiennes et Assyriennes, xx (1898), pp. 127ff. 2. H. Winckler and L. Abel, Der Thontafelfund von El-Amarna, No. 240; J. A. Knudtzon, Die El-Amarna Tafeln, No. 356. 3. Jensen, Keilinschriftliche Bibliothek, vi, 1, p. xviif., in transcription only. 4. A. Strong, Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, xvi (1894), pp. 274ff. The four tablets are translated by Jensen in Keilinschriftliche Bibliothek, vi, 1, pp. 92ff.; Dhorme, Choix de Textes Religieux Assyro-Babyloniens, pp. 148ff. Besides these No. 1 and No. 4 by Scheil, op. cit.; No. 2 by Harper, Beiträge zur Assyriologie, ii, pp. 420ff.; J. A. king, Ashurbanipal (668-626 B. C.) in Nineveh, while the fourth was discovered among the archives of the Egyptian heretic king Amenophis IV (1377-1361 B. C.), in Tell-el-Amarna, Egypt. The latter had the divisions of words marked by small dots in red ink, and was therefore used as a means of teaching the Babylonian language in Egypt.

The contents of the four tablets may be here summarized as a clue to their contents, which in the translation alone might not always be clear upon the first examination.

No. 1. Adapa, or perhaps Adamu, son of Ea, had received from his father wisdom, but not eternal life. He was a semidivine being and was the wise man and priest of the temple of Ea at Eridu, which he provided with the ritual bread and water. In the exercise of this duty he carried on fishing upon the Persian Gulf.

No. 2. When Adapa was fishing one day on a smooth sea, the south wind rose suddenly and overturned his boat, so that he was thrown into the sea. Angered by the mishap, he broke the wings of the south wind so that for seven days it could not blow the sea coolness over the hot land. Anu calls Adapa to account for this misdeed, and his father Ea warns him as to what should befall him. He tells him how to secure the pity of Tammuz and Gishzida, whom he would meet at heaven's portal, and cautions him not to eat the food or partake of the drink which would be set before him, as Ea feared that food and drink of death would be offered him. The counsel was ill advised, for it was, rather, the food of life and the water of life that were set before him, and overcaution deprived him of immortal life, and he had to return to earth.

No. 3 is a duplicate of lines 12 to 21 of No. 2.

No. 4 is so badly broken that its general sense is very difficult to obtain.

The correspondences with Genesis 2 and 3, and the differences also, are most interesting, and it may well be hoped that later discoveries may provide material for still more striking comparisons. It may here be pointed out simply that the "food of life" belongs to the same category as the "tree of life" in Genesis. Adam lost immortality because he desired to become like God; Adapa, on the other hand, was already endowed with knowledge and wisdom, and failed of immortality, not because he was disobedient, like Adam, but through his literal obedience to Ea, his creator. That the Paradise narrative (Gen. 2, 3) may have been influenced at least in part (Zimmern) by the Adapa myth seems most probable. We know, certainly, that this myth had reached Egypt as early as the fourteenth century B. C., and presumably also had passed through Palestine.

IV. PRIMITIVE REVELATION AND THE EARLY KINGS¹

1. PRIMITIVE REVELATION

In Babylon there was a great number of men, of different races, who had settled Chaldea. They lived in an uncivilized manner, like beasts (Syn. 50, 12).

¹ Our only source of information concerning these Babylonian myths and legends is Berossos, a Babylonian priest under Antiochus Soter (281-262 B. C.), fragments of whose work have been preserved by Josephus and Eusebius, the latter having them at second hand from Alexander Polyhistor and Apollodorus. The passage here quoted, which rests partly upon Georgius Syncellus, is published in Eusebii Chronicorum Liber Prior, edidit Alfred Schöne (Berlin, 1875), col. 14f.

² Ἐν δὲ τῇ Βαβυλωνίᾳ πολλὸν πλῆθος ἀνθρώπων γενέσθαι ἀλλοεθνῶν κατοικισάντων τὴν Χαλδαίαν ζῆν δὲ αὐτοῖς ἀτάκτως, ὥσπερ τὰ θηρία (Syn. 50, 12).

In the first year¹ there appeared from the Red Sea, at the place where it borders upon Babylonia, an intelligent² being, by name Oannes, as also Apollodorus has narrated, having, as to the whole, the body of a fish, but underneath the head there had grown another³ head (underneath the head of the fish) and feet likewise of a man, had grown from the tail of the fish. He had a human voice, and a picture of him is even yet preserved.

This being, they say, spent the day with men, taking no nourishment, and gave men knowledge of letters and numbers and many arts, and taught them the settlement of cities, the founding of temples, and introduction of laws and the survey of land, and he explained seeds and the harvesting of crops, and all things together which relate to the civilized life he taught men. From that day nothing else remarkable has been found out (Syn. 51, 2).

When the sun went down this being, Oannes, went again into the sea, and spent the nights in the sea, for he was amphibious. Later there appeared also two others like him, concerning whom, they say, he (i. e.,

² Read ἐμόρον instead of ἀφρον as conjectured by Gutschmid.

³ Gutschmid conjectures "human" and probably correctly; see the human feet below.

Ἐν δὲ τῷ πρώτῳ ἐνιαυτῷ φανῆναι ἐκ τῆς ἐρυθρᾶς θαλάσσης κατὰ τὸν ὁμοροῦντα τόπον τῇ Βαβυλωνίᾳ ζῶον ἀφραῖνον ὀνόματι Ὀάννην, καθὼς καὶ Ἀπολλόδορος ἰστύρησε, τὸ μὲν ὕλον σῶμα ἔχον ἰχθύος, ὑπὸ δὲ τὴν κεφαλὴν παραπεφυκνίαν ἄλλην κεφαλὴν ὑποκάτω τῆς τοῦ ἰχθύος κεφαλῆς, καὶ πόδας ὁμοίως ἀνθρώπου, παραπεφυκτάς δὲ ἐκ τῆς οὐρᾶς τοῦ ἰχθύος· εἶναι δὲ αὐτῷ φωνὴν ἀνθρώπου, τὴν δὲ εἰκόνα αὐτοῦ ἔτι καὶ νῦν διφυλάσσεσθαι.

Τοῦτο δὲ, φησὶ, τὸ ζῶον τὴν μὲν ἡμέραν διατρίβειν μετὰ τῶν ἀνθρώπων, οὐδεμίαν τροφὴν προσφερόμενον, παραδιδόναι τε τοῖς ἀνθρώποις γραμμῶν καὶ μαθημάτων καὶ τεχνῶν παντοδαπῶν ἐμπειρίαν, καὶ πόλεων σινοικισμοῖς καὶ ἱερῶν ἰδρύσεις καὶ νόμων ἐισηγήσεις καὶ γεωμετρίαν διδάσκειν, καὶ σπέρματα καὶ καρπῶν συναγωγὰς ὑποδεικνύναι, καὶ συνόλως πάντα τὰ πρὸς ἡμέρωσιν ἀνήκοντα βίου παραδιδόναι τοῖς ἀνθρώποις· ἀπὸ δὲ τοῦ χρόνου ἐκείνου οὐδὲν ἄλλο περισσὸν εἰρεθῆναι (Syn. 51, 2).

Τοῦ δὲ ἡλίου δύνατος τὸ ζῶον τουτοῦ Ὀάννην δῆναι πάλιν εἰς τὴν θάλασσαν, καὶ τὰς νύκτας ἐν τῷ πελάγει διαιτᾶσθαι· εἶναι γὰρ αὐτὸν ἀμύβιον· ὕστερον δὲ φανῆναι καὶ ἕτερα ζῶα ὅμοια τούτῳ, περὶ ὧν ἐν τῇ τῶν βασιλέων Berosus) gives information in the book of the Kings. But Oannes wrote concerning the creation and concerning citizenship, and gave the treatise to men (Syn. 51, 16).

ἀναγραφῇ φησι δηλώσειν τὸν δὲ Ὀάννην περὶ γενεᾶς καὶ πολιτείας γράψαι καὶ παραδοῦναι τόνδε τὸν λόγον τοῖς ἀνθρώποις (Syn. 51, 16).

2. THE EARLY KINGS¹

These things has Berossus narrated, that the first king was Alorus, from Babylon, a Chaldean; he ruled ten sars² (Syncellus 71, 3). When, he says, Alorus was dead his son Alaparus³ reigned three sars, and after Alaparus Almelson,⁴ a Chaldean from the state Pautibiblon reigned thirteen sars. After Almelson Ammenon⁵ a Chaldean from Parmibiblon⁶ reigned twelve sars. In those days there appeared a certain being from the Red Sea, whom they call Idotion,⁷ whose form was that of a man and of a fish. And after him Amegalarus of the city of Pautibiblon reigned eighteen sars. After this was Daonus, a shepherd of the city of Pautibiblon; he also reigned ten sars.

² A sar = 3,600 years.

³ Alaparus, also Alaporus, Alaprus has been compared with Adapa or Adamu.

⁴ The Greek text reads more correctly Ἀμήλων, which is the Babylonian amêlu = man; compare Enos = man, Gen. 5. 6.

⁵ Babylonian, prob. ummânu = craftsman, so Hommel.

⁶ A mistake for Pautibiblon.

⁷ The Greek text here reads [τὸν μυσαρὸν Ὀάννην] τὸν Ἀννήδωτον. Abydenus has δέυτερον Ανήδωτον, meaning thereby to make Oannes the first Annedotus.

Τὰτα μὲν ὁ βηρωσὸς ἰστορήδε, πρῶτον γενέσθαι βασιλέα Ἀλωρον ἐκ Βαβυλῶνος Χαλδαίων· βασιλεῦσαι δὲ σάρουε δέκα . . . (Syn. 71, 3).

Quum, inquit, obiisset Alorus, regnavit filius ejus Alaparus saros iii. et post Alaparium Almelson es Chaldaeis e civitate Pautibiblon regnavit saros xiii. Post Almelsonem autem Ammenonem ex Chaldaeis e Parmibiblon (ait) regnasse saros xii. In ejus diebus apparuisse bestiam quandam e mari rubro, quam Idotion vocant, cujus forma erat hominis et piscis. Atque postquam Amegalarum ex Pautibiblon urbe regnasse (trahit) saros xviii. Post hunc vero Daonium Pastorem fuisse ex urbe Pautibiblon; eum quoque regnasse saros x.

Under him again from the Red Sea came forth four Sirens,¹ who, in like manner, appeared having the appearance of man and of fish. And thereafter Edoranchus² of the state of Pautibiblon held rule eighteen sars. Under him again from the Red Sea there appeared a certain other being, like fish and man, whose name was Odakon. All these he (i. e., Berossus) says were both collectively and singly sent forth by Oannes. Thereupon Amenphsinus,³ a Chaldean of Lanchara, held rule, and he reigned ten sars. Then Otiartes,⁴ a Chaldean of Lanchara, held rule; and he also reigned eight sars. When Otiartes was dead, his son Xisuthros⁵ reigned eighteen sars. Under him occurred the great flood. All these together make ten kings and one hundred and twenty sars.

² Gr. Ενεδάραχος. This is the Babylonian Enmeduranki, who was the founder of the sorcerer's art, which he received directly from Shamash and Adad, as appears in the following fragmentary text published by Zimmern (Beiträge zur Kenntniss der babl. Religion, pp. 116ff.): "Into the hand of Enmeduranki, king of Sippar, darling of Anu, Bel and Ea, gave Shamash in Ebarra, Shamash and Adad together, Shamash and Adad, Shamash and Adad upon the golden throne; to look upon oil and water [that is, to divine thereby] the secret of Anu, Bel and Ea, the written tablet of the gods, the leathern pouch [compare Exod. 25. 7, the pouch for the Urim and Thummim, 'breastplate'] of the mystery of Heaven and Earth, the cedar staff beloved of the great gods."

⁴ Otiartes should be corrected into Opartes, Babylonian Ubara-Tutu.

⁵ The Babylonian form is Atra-khasis, "the very wise," which becomes, by transposition Khasis-Atra, from which is derived the Greek Xisuthros.

Sub eo iterum e mari rubro (egerssas) quatuor Sirenes eadem ratione hominis et piscis speciem habentes apparuisse. Ac deinde Edoranchum ex Pautibiblon civitate imperium habuisse saros xviii, sub eoque rursum e mari rubro comparuisse aliud quoddam (monstrum), pisci et homini simile, cui nomen vocabatur Odacon. Hæc omnia (sc. monstra) ait, ab Oane summatim singillatim exposita esse. Et postea imperium habuisse Amenphsinum Chaldaeum e Lancharis, eumque regnasse saros x; deinde vero imperium habuisse Otiartem Chaldaeum e Lancharis; et eum quoque regnasse saros viii. Otiarte vero defuncto, filium ejus Xisuthrum regnasse saros xviii; sub eo magnum diluvium factum fuisse. Omnes conjunctim fiunt reges x. sari cxx.

V. THE GILGAMESH EPIC AND THE STORY OF THE DELUGE¹

The Gilgamesh Epic is the most beautiful, most impressive, and most extensive poem which has been preserved to us of the literature of the ancient Babylonians. Its importance for the study of the whole life of this ancient people cannot well be exaggerated. Though heroic both in form and content, it is crowded with mythological material of the greatest interest, and though critically studied for years, it seems likely to offer a mine of research for another century. To students of the Old Testament it is of peculiar interest because it contains as an episode the Babylonian legend of the Flood, which lies at the basis of the Old Testament stories of the Deluge.

The epic consisted originally of twelve large tablets, every one of which had three columns of writing on both obverse and reverse. Many of these have come to us in sadly broken condition, and of some only fragments remain. The text, as we have it, belonged to the great library of Ashurbanipal (668-626 B. C.) and is written for the most part in Assyrian script, though a few fragments are in neo-Babylonian. The name of the poet who produced this version is Sin-liki-unnini, but there are numerous allusions on the tablets to their having been copied from older originals, and two such have been preserved which were written during the first Babylonian dynasty (circa 2000 B. C.).

The poem contains the stories of the great deeds and wonderful adventures of Gilgamesh,¹ the ruler of Uruk,² an historical³ personage originally, to whose illustrious name these clouds of myth and legend have been attached. The episode of the Deluge is here given in full, but in order that its relationship to the whole epic may be understood a synopsis of the epic, with illustrative extracts, is given first.

FIRST TABLET⁴

The poem begins with a brief résumé of the deeds and sufferings of the hero, who had traversed, like Odysseus, the far western sea. The opening lines are badly broken, but may partly be made out as follows:

Who saw everything (?), [. . .] of the land,
 Who [. . .] learned to know, understood (?) everything,
 [. . .] all together . . .]
 The mysteries of wisdom, everything [. . .]

¹ This is quite certainly the correct reading of the name. It used to be read Izdubar, or Gishdubar, and the hero was wrongly identified with Nimrod.

² The biblical Erech, modern Warka. The deities of Uruk were Anu and Ishtar, whose temple is called E-anna.

³ That he was a historical personage is shown by his association in the Omen texts with well-known historical characters; and by the mention in a historical text (see Thureau-Dangin, Die sumerischen und akkadischen Königsinschriften, p. 223, 2b) of the restoration at Uruk of a wall built by him.

⁴ The translation owes most to Jensen, whose remarkable first edition in the Keilinschriftliche Bibliothek laid the foundations for future workers. Here and there a word or suggestion has been caught from Ungnad, Dhorme, and others.

5 The mysterious he saw, the concealed [he looked upon],
 Tidings of the time before the deluge did he bring.
 A far journey did he make, wearying himself and
 [. . .]
 And upon a stone tablet did write all sufferings.
 He built the wall of peace-loving Uruk.

After a break comes the striking line, itself broken but restored from another passage, 51 Two thirds of him is God, one third of him is man.

The tablet then goes on to narrate how he drove the people of Uruk to such heavy labors upon the city walls that they at length appealed to the gods for deliverance from their bondage. The gods hearken to their plaint and beseech the goddess Aruru, who had created Gilgamesh, to create a rival for him that he might draw the attention of the tyrant to other things.

COLUMN II:

When Aruru heard this, she made in her heart a man after the likeness of Anu.

Aruru washed her hands, took a piece of clay, and spat upon it

35 Engidu¹ she created, the hero, a lofty offspring, a ruler of Ninib.

Engidu was covered with hair, and lived his life among the wild beasts, protecting them against the hunters and trappers. In this free life among the beasts he came in conflict with a huntsman, who complained to his father and then to Gilgamesh. On the advice of these two the hunter took with him a harlot, whose charms enchained Engidu and induced him to follow her to Uruk. There he met Gilgamesh, who had been forewarned in two dreams, and the first tablet concludes with the beginning of friendship between them.

¹ The name "Engidu" is Sumerian, and means Engi (=Enki or Ea) "is creator." It has hitherto been often read Eabani.

SECOND TABLET

The beginning of the second tablet is so badly broken that fifty lines are wanting. From the fragments that remain we learn that Engidu, enticed by the lure of the wilderness, had left Gilgamesh and returned to his friendly beasts, among whom he lamented the enticements of the harlot which had taken him away to the city. But the sun god Shamash cried to him out of heaven that she had rather brought him only to good, to divine food and royal drink and festival garb. Moved by the words of the god, Engidu returned to Uruk, where a terrible dream came to him, and is related to Gilgamesh.

COLUMN IV:

“My friend, a dream saw I in the night,
 15 The heaven [thundered], the earth answered
 Before a mighty one I stood [. . .] sombre was his visage.

This mighty creature must have been a demon from the underworld, who caught Engidu away into the dark abodes of death.

30 “To that dwelling, which one enters, but comes not forth again,
 To that road, whose course returns not again,
 To that dwelling to whose inhabitants light is denied,
 Where earth is their food, clay their repast;
 Covered are they, like birds, with feathers, 35 And the light they behold not, in darkness they dwell.”

What the meaning of the dream may be is unknown to us; perhaps it is ominous of Engidu's death. At the end of the tablet we find the two friends planning a great journey against Khumbaba, the Elamite warder of the cedar mountain of Irnini, that is, Ishtar. The thought would seem to be that Gilgamesh goes out to rescue from this forest the statue of the goddess. Perhaps this portion of the epic rests upon the historical event of the carrying away into Elam of a goddess image by Kuturnankhundi, which Ashurbanipal says occurred sixteen hundred and thirty-five years before his time ($645 + 1635 = 2280$ B. C.).

THIRD TABLET

COLUMN I:

20 Gilgamesh opened his mouth and spoke.

He said to Engidu:

“My friend let us go to the great palace,

To the servant of Nin-sun, the great queen,

To Rishat-Ninlil,¹ who is mistress of all knowledge.”

Gilgamesh then induces his mother to make an offering to Shamash, doubtless to secure his favor upon the great undertaking, and perhaps also to secure an oracle concerning its success.

FOURTH TABLET

The fragmentary character of this tablet makes it very difficult to recover a connected narrative. So far as we can see at the beginning the friends are in a dispute, Engidu striving to induce Gilgamesh to abandon the foolhardy expedition. But they set out, nevertheless, and approach the cedar mountain where the god Ellil has set the fearsome Khumbaba as a warder.

COLUMN V:

- 1 To guard safely the cedars,
 To affright the peoples Ellil had appointed him, Khumbaba, his voice is a trumpet, his mouth like the gods, his breath a wind.

Even yet does Eabani strive in vain to turn back his friend. They go on approaching nearer to the mountain.

FIFTH TABLET

COLUMN I:

- They stood still and looked at the Forest,
 The height of the cedars they regarded,
 They contemplated the entrance to the Forest
 The high door, where Khumbaba enters.
- 5 Well made are the roads, well made the path.
 They view the cedar mountain, home of the gods, sanctuary of Irnini.

There follows some account of Khumbaba's preparations for the fray, and then two dreams of Engidu, the purport of which was to encourage Gilgamesh to expect success. The account of the contest is lost, but the issue was a great victory for the two friends, who return joyously to Uruk, probably bringing with them the long lost statue of the goddess Irnini.

SIXTH TABLET

Gilgamesh washes his weapons, adorns himself in fine raiment, and sets a tiara upon his head. At the sight of him, thus glorious, Ishtar burns with love and addresses the hero:

COLUMN I:

- Come, Gilgamesh, be (my) lover,
 Give me thy fruit, yea, give me,
 Be thou my husband, I thy wife,
- 10 I will harness for thee a chariot of lapislazuli and gold;

Its wheels of gold; its horns of diamond (?)

Daily shalt thou span great horses to it.

Enter into our house amid the scent of cedars,

When thou enterest into our house

15 They that sit on thrones shall kiss thy feet;

Before thee shall bow kings, lords, princes,

The gifts of mountain and land shall they bring thee in tribute.

But Gilgamesh refuses her, remembering her former lovers, and the sorry issue of their amours, for she was ever fickle:

Which of thy lovers hast thou always [loved]?

To which one of thy shepherds went all things well?

Come, I will unfold the misfortunes thou hast sent (?)

45 Set the sum to the reckoning.

And then he recounts the miseries of Tammuz, a lover most unfortunate, and others still whom she had spurned when her love had cooled.

Ishtar is filled with rage at his refusal and mounts up to heaven to her father, Anu, to seek from him vengeance for the insult. At her request the god creates a bull and sends him down to Uruk to destroy Gilgamesh. The bull slays many until at last Engidu, with the help of Gilgamesh, destroys him, and casts upward to Ishtar a piece of his carcass, accompanied by fearful taunts.

Gilgamesh dedicates the bull's horns to his god Lugalbanda, and, with Engidu, marches in triumph through the streets of Uruk. As they approach the palace he shouts, 200 Who is beautiful among men?

Who is glorious among heroes?

and hears the mighty response from the women,

Gilgamesh is beautiful among men,

Gilgamesh is glorious among heroes.

They held high festival in the palace, but on that very night Eabani is visited again with an ominous and disturbing dream.

SEVENTH TABLET

Engidu tells his dream to Gilgamesh—so much seems certain to remain of the seventh tablet, all else being uncertain. It seems probable, as Jensen suggests, that Gilgamesh should then interpret the dream. It seems also probable that a very fragmentary account of Engidu's severe illness may belong to this tablet, though Jensen does not agree to this. The matter must be left in uncertainty.

EIGHTH TABLET

Engidu dies, though whether his death was due to disease or to the smiting of the curses of Ishtar is unknown. At first Gilgamesh thinks his friend is merely asleep:

COLUMN II:

“Engidu, my young friend, thou tiger of the desert,
 After everything possible we [. . .] and the mountain have climbed,
 Have taken and slain Heaven's bull,
 Have slain Khumbaba, who dwelt in the cedar forest,
 15 Now, what is this sleep that has seized thee?
 Sombre art thou, and thou hearkenest not to me.”
 But he lifted not his eyes,
 He (Gilgamesh) touched his heart; it beat no more
 Then he draped his friend like a bride [. . .]
 20 As a lion, which cries [. . .]
 As a lioness deprived of her whelps [. . .]
 He turned away [. . .]

Then he flies away into the wilderness, crazed with grief.

NINTH TABLE

Gilgamesh wanders in the desert, apparently the vast wastes between Arabia and Syria (so Jensen).

COLUMN I:

Gilgamesh for Engidu, his friend,
Wept bitterly and wandered through the desert:
"Shall not I also, die like Engidu?

Sorrow has come within my vitals,

5 I fear death, therefore do I wander in the desert."

In this mood he feels how sad it is that no friendly herb grows with sovereign powers against death. So far as he knows only one of his forefathers, Ut-napishtim, son of Ubara-Tutu, has escaped death, and is living far away beyond the western seas:

"To the power of Ut-napishtim, son of Ubara-Tutu,
I take my way, I shall go quickly

To the defiles of the mountains, I shall come by night:

If I see lions and fear

10 I shall lift my head and invoke Sin."

He sets out upon the journey and arrives at Mount Mashu (perhaps the Lebanon region), which he finds guarded by terrible scorpion men, whose mien is horrible and deadly. For some reason they receive him kindly, though cautioning him of the dangers of his road. For twelve double hours he wanders in darkness and then sees the light of the sun once more. There, under the light, he finds himself in a beautiful garden by the seaside.

TENTH TABLE

There on a throne sets Siduri-Sabitu, who, when she sees the unkempt Gilgamesh, is filled with terror, and locks her doors. He threatens to break them down and is admitted. To her questions he tells the story of Engidu's death and all his troubles and sorrows since. From her he begs tidings of the way to reach Ut-Napishtim, but receives a disappointing answer.

COLUMN II:

20 Sabitu said to him, to Gilgamesh,
 "There hath never been passage (thither),
 And none, from the days of old hath crossed that sea.
 Only the hero Shamash hath crossed that sea, but,
 except for him, who shall pass it?
 The crossing is difficult, painful the way
 And deep are the waters of death, which lie before it, hindering.

Perhaps Ur-Shanabi (read also Kalab-Ea and Amel-Ea), the sailor of Ut-napishtim, who is just now near by, may help him. When appealed to he consents, and entering the ship they cross in three days the sea which under other circumstances had cost a month and a half of journeying. This journey must have been the length of the Mediterranean, and the waters of death which then lie before them are doubtless the wild Atlantic itself. Then the journey becomes more dangerous, but at last they approach the coast where Ut-napishtim stands wondering to see a passenger brought to his realm. When greetings are over, Gilgamesh asks him how he had attained endless life, and in reply receives the splendid story of the Flood, from the lips of the great hero who had survived its terrors.

ELEVENTH TABLET

Gilgamesh said to him, to Ut-napishtim, the far-away:

 Loudly cried the queen of the gods with her beautiful voice,
 "The former time is turned into clay,

 Because I commanded evil in the assembly of the gods
 For the destruction of my people I commanded battle.
 I alone bore my people.
 [And now] like the spawn of fish they fill the sea."

 The gods sat bowed and weeping,
 Covered were their lips [. . .]
 Six days and [six] nights
 Blew the wind, the deluge and the tempest overwhelmed the land.
 20 When the seventh day drew nigh, the tempest spent itself in the battle,

 Then rested the sea, the storm fell asleep, the flood ceased.
 I looked upon the sea, there was silence come,
 And all mankind was turned to clay.

Let Ut-napishtim dwell afar off at the mouth of the rivers.”

35 They took me and afar off, at the mouth of the rivers they made me to dwell.

With these words the long story of the deluge is ended, and Ut-napishtim takes thought for his earthly visitor and says:

“Who of the gods, will now gather thee to himself
That thou mayest find the life thou seekest?

Come, lie not down to sleep six days and seven nights”

The idea is that if he can master sleep, twin brother of death, he might thus learn to master death itself. But the test is too severe and the hero falls asleep. Ut-napishtim mocks his weakness, but his wife, moved with pity for the helpless wanderer, desires her husband to make some provision for getting him back again. Her husband, moved by her appeal, calls to Gilgamesh to secure for himself a certain plant¹ which grew in the bottom of the ocean. Gilgamesh ties heavy stones to his feet and plunges into the sea, from which he brings up the needful plant.

He is overjoyed and thinks that he has possessed himself of the plant of eternal life. So does he boast of it.

Gilgamesh said to him, to Ur-shanabi, the sailor:

295 Ur-shanabi, this plant is a plant of renown,

Whereby man obtains his longings (?)

¹ A very pretty dispute rages over the identification of this plant. Dr. Küchler has made the brilliant suggestion that it may be coral. Coral, however, grows in salt water, and it was from the ocean of sweet water (apsu) that Gilgamesh drew his plant. Perhaps this is not a valid argument against Küchler, as the Assyrians may not have known the habitat of coral.

I will carry it to walled Uruk, there will I make to eat of it [. . .]

Its name is: 'When old shall man become young again.'

I myself will eat it, to return to my youth."

Then they made the long journey, and when they had come to land, Gilgamesh went to bathe in a pool of fresh water. While thus employed a serpent stole the precious plant away, and left the hero disconsolate. Overland on foot to Uruk they made their weary way, and the tablet concludes with plans, announced to the sailor by Gilgamesh, for rebuilding the city walls—the very walls which had been the cause of all his troubles in the beginning.

TWELFTH TABLET

Gilgamesh had sadly failed in all his journeys; here he finds himself back again in Uruk, and none the wiser concerning the mysteries which he had hoped to solve. He now desires to make his way to the abode of the dead, there to learn what the dead might have to say concerning this life and its problems.

He fails to meet the conditions laid upon him, and cannot find his way to the abode of the dead. He therefore determines to bring the spirit of Engidu to earth again, if the gods will permit. His appeals to Ellil to accomplish this object are in vain, and so also does Sin refuse, but Ea, on the other hand, commands Nergal to send up the longed-for spirit.

COLUMN III:

When the bold and noble Nergal [heard this]

He opened a hole in the earth and Caused the spirit of Engidu, like a wind, to come out of the earth.

Then began a dialogue between the reunited friends; but, alas! Engidu cannot lift the curtain of the great mysteries. The only comfort he can bring is that, though men must die, in the next world they find themselves among the friends they had on earth. The search for eternal life has ended in failure, yet there is a comfort and solace in the thought of the associations in the life after death.

2. ANOTHER RECENSION OF THE DELUGE STORY¹

The story of the Deluge preserved in the eleventh tablet of the Gilgamesh Epic was not the only form in which the Babylonian legends were preserved. It was not canonized, and men might write other forms, or alter the others, as did the Hebrews with their narratives, until canonization had crystallized them. This recension belonged also to Ashurbanipal's library. It elaborates somewhat the conversation between Ea and Ut-napishtim which appears in the Nimrod Epic xi, l. 26f.

4. ANOTHER ANCIENT BABYLONIAN DELUGE FRAGMENT ¹

This small fragment of unbaked clay was discovered at Nippur by the expedition of the University of Pennsylvania. The obverse has been broken off, and the reverse remains in a very fragmentary condition. Hilprecht, who discovered and published the tablet, computes that it "was written some time between 2137 and 2005 B. C., or, in round figures, about 2100 B. C. This is the very latest date to which this fragment possibly can be assigned, both according to its place of discovery and the palæographical evidence presented by the tablet itself." There is some dispute as to the extent or accuracy of the records concerning the place of discovery, and the palæographical evidence is not quite conclusive. The tablet may well be as old as Professor Hilprecht argues, but the suggestion of a date so late as the early Kassite period (1700 B. C.) can hardly be excluded. The tablet is a very interesting addition to the Deluge literature, however the question of date may be decided.

¹ The tablet is published and translated by Hilprecht, The Earliest Version of the Babylonian Deluge Story and the Temple Library of Nippur. peared to him in a dream, and said that on the fifteenth of Dasios mankind would be destroyed by a cataclysm. He had commanded him to dig and to place at Sippar a written account of the beginning, middle, and end of all things,¹ and then to build a boat and enter it with relatives and remaining friends. He should also put provisions in it and animals, both winged and four-footed, and, when all was prepared, set sail. If anyone should ask whither he was sailing, he should answer, "To the gods, to sue that things may be well with men." Xisuthros obeyed and built a boat of five² stadia long and two stadia wide, and then when everything was arranged he embarked wife and children and near friends (Syn. 53, 19).

When the cataclysm came and immediately ceased Xisuthros let fly certain of the birds. These, however, having found neither food nor a place to rest, came again into the ship. Again after certain days Xisuthros let the birds go. But these again returned having their feet soiled with clay. When he let them go a third time they did not return again to the ship. Xisuthros knew from this that the land had appeared again, and when he had removed a part of the side of the ship he saw that the ship had grounded upon a certain mountain. Thereupon he left the ship with wife and daughter and the pilot, and when he had bowed to earth he erected an altar. Having offered sacrifice upon this, he vanished with those who had come out of the ship with him. Those who had remained on the ship, when Xisuthros and his companions did not return, also landed, and sought him, calling him by name. Xisuthros himself did not appear to them, but a voice came from heaven, calling to them, that they ought to reverence the gods, for that he, because of his fear of the gods, had gone to dwell with them. But the same honor must be given his wife and daughter and the pilot. He bade them also to return to Babylon, and that they should recover the writings from Sippar and share them with men. The place where they are is the land of Armenia (Syn. 54, 17).

When they had heard this they sacrificed to the gods

These, however, came to Babylonia, dug up the writings at Sippar, and founded many cities and shrines and again repopulated Babylonia (Syn. 55, 16-56, 3).

6. DESTRUCTION BY FIRE

The opposite idea to the destruction by a great flood is the destruction of the world by fire. No mention of such an idea has yet been found in any original Babylonian or Assyrian text, but there is evidence that such a doctrine did prevail among the Babylonians. Seneca quotes Berossus as having made an allusion to this, and the passage is so important that it is here reproduced. There seems good reason also for supposing that this Babylonian idea may have passed over to the Hebrews. The matter is not quite certain, but the following passages, cited by Zimmern, may be echoes of this Babylonian idea: Mic. 1. 4; Nah. 1. 5; Psa. 97. 5; 104. 32; 2 Pet. 3. 7, 10.

Berosus¹ who interpreted Bel,² says that this will happen through the course of the stars, and affirms it to

² The expression is of doubtful meaning.

Berosus, qui Belum interpretatus est, ait cursu ista siderum fieri, et adeo quidem id affirmat, ut conflagrationi atque diluvio tempora this extent that he appoints times for the conflagration and for the deluge. He argues that the earthly things will be burned, when all the stars,¹ which now have diverse courses, shall come together in Cancer,² so that placed in one position a straight line might pass through all. On the other hand, there will be a flood when the same stars come together in Capricorn. The former is the summer solstice, the latter the winter solstice—signs of great moment, for in them are the chief changes of the year.

² The Cancer is the zodiacal sign of the spring solstice as Capricorn is that of the winter solstice.

Illic solstitium, hinc bruma conficitur; magnae potentiae signa, quando in ipsa mutatione anni momenta sunt.

VI. EA AND ATRAKHASIS¹

From Ashurbanipal's library have come down to us four badly broken columns of a text originally containing six columns. Its fragmentary condition makes it difficult to be perfectly certain about its bearing upon the Atrakhasis myth of the Deluge. It may be tentatively suggested, as Zimmern has done, that this text has the same general application as the small text from the reign of Anmizadugga (see p. 104f.). In this tablet the story seems to be that men had sinned, and because of this had been afflicted with famine, which became so severe that children were eaten. In this terrible suffering Atrakhasis sought the aid of Ea. The text is, unhappily, broken at this point, but we next hear of an assembly of the gods in which Ellil complains again of the sins of men. The inference would seem to be that the famine had been removed meanwhile and fruitfulness restored, but that men had resumed their sins. Then pestilence was sent as a punishment, and again Atrakhasis appeals to Ea, and again men are spared only to resume their sins. Again they are plunged into difficulties with unfruitfulness of the land and the failure of child-birth. The idea of the whole series of punishments would seem to be that Ellil is trying differing punishments, and when all have failed then he resorts at last to the sending of a flood. See for further exposition of this theory Zimmern in Schrader's Keilinschriften und das Alte Testament, 3te Auf., pp. 552ff. The text was used as an incantation over women about to bear children.

¹ The text is published in Cuneiform Texts, xv, Plate 49. It has been translated by Zimmern, Zeitschrift für Assyriologie, xiv, pp. 277ff.; Jensen, Keilinschriftliche Bibliothek, vi, 1, pp. 274ff.; Dhorme, Choix de Textes Religieux Assyro-Babyloniens, pp. 128ff.; Ungnad in Gressmann, Altorientalische Texte und Bilder, i, pp. 61ff. Compare also Weber, Literatur der Babylonier und Assyrer, pp. 94ff.; Jensen, Das Gilgamesh-Epos in der Weltliteratur, pp. 68ff.

- To the road whose path turns not back.
 To the house where he who enters is deprived of light,
 Where dust is their sustenance, their food clay,
 Light they see not, in darkness do they sit,
 10 They are clothed like a bird, with wings as a covering,
 Over door and bolt is spread the dust.
 Ishtar, when she came to the door of the land of
 No-return,
 Addressed the word to the porter of the door:
 "O watchman, open the door,
 15 Open the door that I may enter.
 If thou dost not open the door, that I may enter,
 I shall shatter the door, I shall break the bolt,
 I shall shatter the threshold, I shall tear down the doors,
 I shall bring up the dead that they may eat the living,¹
 20 The dead shall be more numerous than the living."
 The porter opened his mouth and spake

¹ There has been much discussion of the meaning of this line, though it would appear hardly justified. The Assyrian means, literally, "I shall bring up the dead, eating, living." Maspero and Dhorme translate, "I shall bring up the dead that they may eat the living," and Ungnad agrees that this is "possible." I feel doubtful about it, but perhaps the idea was that they would be like vampires.

He spake to the great Ishtar:

“Stay, my lady, do not destroy,

I will go, I will announce thy name to my sovereign
Ereskigal”¹

25 The watchman went within, he spake [to Eresh-kigal]:

This is thy sister Ishtar [. . .]

before] their day.

Go, watchman, open the gate,

¹ Ereshkigal is queen of Hades, and wife of Nergal, god of the dead.

² The sense of the line is still quite undetermined.

³ The meaning of this line, as also that of the next, is quite uncertain.

The countenance of Papsukkal,¹ messenger of the great gods, was fallen, his face darkened,
He was clad in mourning, with foul garments covered,

Then went Shamash,² before Sin his father, he wept.
In the presence of king Ea came his tears:

5 "Ishtar has descended to the earth, she has not come up again.

Since Ishtar has descended to the land of No-return,
The bull has not sprung upon the cow, the ass has not bent over the jenny

The man no more bows over the woman in the

The man sleeps in his chamber,

10 The woman sleeps alone.

Then Ea created in his wise heart an image,
He created Asushunamir,³ a player (?)⁴

"Go, Asushunamir, set thy face to the gate of the land of No-return,

¹ Papsukkal is in mourning for Ishtar; what other function he performed in this poem is not clear.

² Shamash is the brother of Ishtar, and therefore mourns her. Sin is the father of both, and, as apparently he fails of suggestion in the premises, Shamash turns to Ea.

³ The name means "his origin is brilliant."

⁴ The meaning of assinu, here translated "player," is uncertain. The context would seem to convey the idea that he was to play or perform before Ereshkigal and win her favor.

¹The idea of this and the following lines seems to be that, having won her favor, he was to ask an impossible thing after she had sworn to grant anything. When she refused, and so broke her oath, she would no longer have power over Ishtar.

Jensen supposes that something has fallen out of the text, but there is no clear evidence in support of this. The difficulty may be due to our inability so to understand the words as to supply mentally the gaps which the interpretation requires.

When the gods prepared a feast,
To their sister Ereshkigal
They sent a messenger:

“Even if we should descend to thee,

Ereshkigal sent Namtar, her messenger.

Namtar went up to the high heaven

And entered [. . .] the gods were talking,

10 They [.] Namtaru
The messenger of their great sister.

¹ The myth has come down to us on two fragments found in 1887 at Tell-el-Amarna, Egypt. One piece is in the British Museum, and was published by Bezold and Budge, The Tell-el-Amarna Tablets in the British Museum, No. 82. The other is in the Berlin Museum, and was published by Winckler and Abel, Der Thontafelfund von El-Amarna, No. 240. Compare J. A. Knudtzon, Beiträge zur Assyriologie, iv, pp. 130ff. It is translated by Jensen in the Keilinschriftliche Bibliothek, vi, 1, pp. 74ff.; by Ungnad in Gressmann, Altorientalische Texte und Bilder, i, p. 69f.; and by Knudtzon, Die El-Amarna Tafeln, No. 357. Knudtzon is now persuaded that the two tablets were originally one. See further on the contents Zimmern in Schrader's Keilinschriften und das Alte Testament, p. 583f.; and Weber, Die Literatur der Babylonier und Assyrer.

Namtaru went; he spoke to the gods.

The gods called him; they spoke with him,

30 "Behold the god, who did not arise before thee, Take him before thy lady."

Namtaru counted them; a god was missing in the rear.

Where is the god, who did not arise before me?"

Behold, Namtar goes away, [he gave his message].

¹The meaning of lines 43 to 62 seems to be the following: Namtar had gone before the gods who gave him permission to pick out the offending god, whom they would then deliver over to death. He did not find him. Then Ea orders his son Nergal to go before Ereshkigal, and promises to send with him as a defense fourteen demons of sickness as his defenders. Thus accompanied, Nergal goes to the realm of Ereshkigal.

²These are the names of the demons of sickness, their names meaning little else than "Fever," "Fire," "Heat," and the like, which Ea had given Nergal as his defense.

IX. THE LEGEND OF SARGON, KING OF AGADE¹

COLUMN I:

Sargon, the mighty king, the king of Agade, am I,
My mother was lowly, my father I knew not,
And the brother of my father dwells in the mountain.

¹ First published in Part III R., 4, No. 7, and in full by King, in Cuneiform Texts, xiii, pp. 42ff., and by him again in Chronicles concerning Old Babylonian Kings, ii, pp. 87ff. It has been often translated, e. g., by George Smith, Transactions of the Society of Biblical Archæology, i, p. 46f.; Sayce, Hibbert Lectures, p. 26f. n. 1; Winckler, Keilinschriftliche Bibliothek, iii, part i, p. 100f.; Ungnad in Gressmann, Altorientalische Texte und Bilder, i, p. 79. HYMNS AND PRAYERS

HYMNS AND PRAYERS

THERE are no greater treasures in all the literature of Babylonia and Assyria than the hymns and prayers. They have, indeed, sometimes been valued too highly, chiefly because they have so frequently been appraised solely by means of extracts, sometimes indeed by very short passages, and even when judged by longer excerpts, these have been so chosen as to leave out essential contexts. The passages here given are complete, even the incantation rituals being carefully set down with the lyrical or supplicative contents. The parallels to the Hebrew psalter need to be very cautiously drawn. Superficial resemblances are misleading, and the deeper analogies are sometimes not easily discerned. There is no general agreement yet secured among scholars upon these delicate points. It is, however, quite clear that in spite of much that is beautiful in these hymns, they are as a whole deficient in individual character, having much sameness of phrase and, so far as we are able to judge, of metre, and in these qualities, as well as in pure religious character, stand far below the book of Psalms.

1. HYMN TO SIN, THE MOON GOD

O Lord, chief of the gods, who alone is exalted on earth and in heaven.

¹ Published in IV R., 9. Translated by Zimmern, Hymnen, p. 11f.; by E. G. Perry, Hymnen und Gebete an Sin (Leipzig, 1907), pp. 1ff.; and by Ungnad in Gressmann, Altorientalische Texte und Bilder, i, pp. 80, 81. Compare also Zimmern in Schrader's Keilinschriften und das Alte Testament, 3te Auf., pp. 608, 609; Jastrow, Die Religion Babyloniens und Assyriens, i, pp. 436ff.; Combe, Culte de Sin, pp. 94ff. The hymn is a bilingual, being handed down in Sumerian, in the eme-sal dialect, and in Assyrian.

2. HYMN TO RAMMAN, THE WEATHER GOD¹

"Ramman² the glorious," is thy name, exalted god;

"Lord Ramman, mighty bull and glorious," is thy name, exalted god;

¹ This strange but powerful hymn, written in Sumerian, belongs to a remote period of antiquity, perhaps as early as the third millennium before Christ. It is published by King in Cuneiform Texts from Babylonian Tablets, etc., in the British Museum, xv, 15, 16, and was first translated by Langdon, in Babyloniaca, ii, pp. 162-167, and again in his Sumerian and Babylonian Psalms, pp. 280-283, and yet again in the Expositor, June, 1910; and by Ungnad in Gressmann, Altorientalische Texte und Bilder, i, pp. 83, 84.

² The name in Sumerian is Ishkur, and the god corresponds to Ramman of the Assyrians, the West-Semitic god Adad.

[(dingir) Iškur sīg]-è-a mu-zu dingir [zag-šú]
[ù-mu-un] (dingir) Iškur gud-maġ sīg-è-a mu-zu dingir [zag-šú]

- “Ramman, child of heaven, mighty bull and glorious,” is thy name, exalted god;
 “Lord of Karkar,¹ mighty bull and glorious” is thy name, exalted god;
 5 “Ramman, lord of plenty, mighty bull and glorious” is thy name, exalted god;
 “Companion of the lord Ea, mighty bull and glorious” is thy name, exalted god;²
 “Father Ramman, lord that rideth the storm” is thy name, exalted god;
 “Father Ramman, that rideth the great storm” is thy name, exalted god;
 Father Ramman, that rideth the great lion,” is thy name, exalted god;
 10 Ramman, lion of heaven, mighty bull and glorious, is thy name, exalted god;
 Thy name doth enthral the land,
 Thy splendor covers the land like a garment.
 At thy thunder the great mountain father Mullil³ is shaken.
 At thy rumbling the great mother Ninlil trembles.
 15 Ellil sent forth his son Ramman:

¹ Karkar is the seat of the cultus of this god.

² The text as published does not contain the refrain in this line, but the line is broken at the end and may have contained at the edge the sign for “ditto.” It seems improbable that it was omitted altogether.

³ Enlil (Ellil) (Mullil), the god of the earth, and Ninlil is his wife.

Who, oh my son, directeth the storm, sendeth forth the storm?

Ramman directeth the storm, sendeth forth the storm.

The storm like the seven demons (?) flieth; he sendeth forth the storm.

Spirit, may thy sonorous voice give forth its utterance, he sendeth forth the storm.

- 20 The lightning, thy messenger, goeth before (thee), he sendeth forth the storm.

Who, my son, beareth splendor, who that cometh can strive (with thee)?

If the foe do evil (thy) father is by thee, who can strive (with thee)?

The little hail thou holdest, who can strive with thee?

The great hail thou holdest, who can strive with thee?

- 25 Thy little and great hail stones let be upon him.

Let thy right hand destroy the foe, thy left arm pluck him away."

Ramman gave ear to the words of the father, his creator.

The father Ramman went out of the house, spirit of sonorous voice,

Out of the house, out of the city went (he) up, the youthful lion,

3. PROCESSIONAL HYMN TO MARDUK ¹

O Lord, on thine entrance into thy house, may thy house rejoice in thee.

Mighty Lord Marduk, on thine entrance into thy house,² may thy house rejoice in thee.

Great warrior, lord Enbilulu, on thine entrance into thy house, may thy house rejoice in thee.

Rest, O Lord, rest, O Lord, may thy house rejoice in thee.

5 Rest, lord of Babylon, may thy house rejoice in thee.

Rest, lord of E-sagila,³ may thy house rejoice in thee.

Rest, lord of E-zida, may thy house rejoice in thee.

Rest, lord of E-makhtila, may thy house rejoice in thee.

E-sagila, the house of thy lordship, may thy house rejoice in thee.

¹ This text exists both in an Assyrian copy belonging to Ashurbanipal's library, and also in a Sumerian and Babylonian original discovered by the Deutsche Orient-Gesellschaft in Babylon. The former is published IV R., 18, No. 2, the latter by F. H. Weissbach, Babylonische Miscellen (1903), Plate 13f., who also translates it pp. 36ff. It is also translated by Rogers, The Religion of Babylonia and Assyria, pp. 178, 179, where there is also some discussion of its characteristics. It is translated again by Ungnad in Gressmann, Altorientalische Texte und Bilder, i, p. 85, with the omission of lines 13-28.

² In the second line and thereafter only the word "house" is repeated, the rest of the formula being mentally supplied from the first line.

³ Esagila is Marduk's temple in Babylon, E-zida the temple of Nabu in Borsippa, and also the name of a sanctuary of the same god in the temple of E-sagila; E-makhtila is a temple or chapel of Nabu in Borsippa.

- 10 Thy city cries out to thee, "Rest,"¹ may thy house
rejoice in thee.
Babylon cries out to thee, "Rest," may thy house
rejoice in thee.
The great Anu, father of the gods, cries out to thee,
"Rest at last."
May the mighty mountain, father Bel,² cry to thee,
"Rest at last."
The queen of city and house, the great mother Belit, cry to thee, "Rest at last."
- 15 Ninib, the first born of Bel, with the exalted armor of Anu, cry to thee, "Rest at last."
Sin, the light of heaven and earth, cry to thee,
"Peace at last."
The strong hero, Shamash, son of Nin-gal, cry to thee, "Peace at last."
Ea, king of the deep, cry to thee, "Peace at last."
Damkina, queen of the deep, cry to thee, "Peace at last."
- 20 Sarpanitum, the daughter-in-law³ of the deep, cry to thee, "Peace at last."

¹ The word "Rest" here and elsewhere in the hymn is an abbreviation of the old formula of the incantation texts, "May thy heart be appeased." The hymn was to be sung antiphonally, the priest repeating the first half of the line and the people responding with the refrain. Compare the Hallel Psalms of the Hebrews, Psalms 113-118.

² "Mighty mountain," the home of the gods. Father Bel is Ellil, the elder Bel of Nippur.

³ She is the wife of Marduk, who was the son of Ea, god of the deep.

25 The lord Madanu, the overseer of the Anunaki, cry to thee, "Peace at last."

Bau, the gracious consort, cry to thee, "Peace at last."

Adad, beloved son of Anu, cry to thee, "Peace at last."

Shala, the great lady,¹ cry to thee, "Peace at last."

The lord, possessor of power, who dwells in E-kur, may the courage² of thy godhead be appeased.

30 Lord of the gods art thou, may the gods of heaven and earth appease thine anger,

Thy city, Nippur, cast not away. Let them cry to thee, "O lord, peace."

Sippar cast not away. Let her cry to thee, "O lord, peace."

Babylon, the city of thy peace, cast not away. Let her cry to thee, "O lord, peace."

¹ She was apparently the wife of Adad, for she is named with him in Sennacherib's Bavian Inscription, line 48.

² "Courage," so Weissbach, but it is doubtful.

4. A "PRAYER OF THE RAISING OF THE HAND" TO ISHTAR¹

Incantation. I pray unto thee, sovereign of sovereigns, goddess of goddesses, Ishtar, queen of all men, directress of mankind.

O Irnini,² O exalted one, mistress of the Igigi,

Thou art mighty, thou art queen, thy name is exalted,

5 Thou art the light of heaven and earth, O valiant daughter of Sin,

¹ Neo-Babylonian text published and translated by L. W. King, The Seven Tablets of Creation, i, pp. 222ff., ii, Plate lxxvff.; Zimmern, Hymnen, pp. 19ff.; Dhorme, Choix de Textes Religieux Assyro-Babyloniens, pp. 356ff.; Jastrow, Die Religion Babyloniens und Assyriens, ii, pp. 66ff.; Ungnad in Gressmann, Altorientalische Texte und Bilder, i, pp. 85ff.

² Ishtar is here identified with Irnini, and below with Gushea. This process of identification was widely extended. Elsewhere she is identified with Nana, Belit, etc.

- 40 Where thou dost regard the dead live, the sick arise.
 The unjust become just beholding thy face,
 I invoke, sorrowful, sighing, suffering thy servant.
 Look upon me, O my lady, and accept my supplication,
 Pity me in truth, and hearken unto my prayer
- 45 Speak deliverance unto me, let thy heart be appeased.
 Deliverance for my suffering body, full of troubles and disorders?
 Deliverance for my afflicted heart, full of sorrow and sighing?
 Deliverance for my suffering bowels, troubled and confused?
 Deliverance for my troubled house, pouring forth complaints?

My heart hath taken wing, it hath flown away like a bird of the heavens.

I moan like a dove, night and day.

- 65 I am made desolate, and I weep bitterly,
In pain and sorrow my soul is distressed.

What have I done, O my god and my goddess?

Is it because I feared not my god or my goddess that trouble hath befallen me?

Sickness, headache, ruin and destruction are come upon me;

- 70 Miseries, turning away of countenance, and fullness of anger are my lot,

Indignation, wrath, anger of gods and men.

I behold, O my lady, days of affliction, months of sorrow, years of misfortune;

I behold, O my lady, judgment of disorder and violence,

Death and misery make an end of me.

- 75 Desolate is my sanctuary, my shrine is desolate,
Over my house, my gate, and my fields is affliction poured forth.

As for my god his face is turned elsewhere;

My family is scattered, my house walls are broken into.

5. HYMN TO ISHTAR

O light of the heavens, thou that dost flame like a fire over the earth,

¹ This hymn belongs to a series, called in Sumerian URU GULAGE, i. e., "She whose city is destroyed," which consisted originally of six tablets, of which the third and fourth have been lost. The hymn is found on the reverse of Tablet Six, and was also used independently, as is shown by its preservation upon a separate tablet (British Museum S. 954, published by Delitzsch, Assyrische Lesestücke, 3rd edition, pp. 134-136). It has been translated by Hussey, Sumerian-Babylonian Hymns, American Journal of Semitic Languages, xxiii, pp. 169ff., and by Langdon, Sumerian and Babylonian Psalms, pp. 192ff.; Dhorme, Choix de Textes Religieux Assyro-Babyloniens, pp. 366ff.

6. FRAGMENT OF WISDOM LITERATURE, THE SO-CALLED BABYLONIAN JOB, SECOND TABLET OF THE WISDOM OF 𒀭TÂBI-UTUL-ELLIL¹

I attained unto (long) I moved beyond the appointed time, life,

¹ Published IV R., 2d edition, 60. The text was already the subject of comment in Assyrian times, and explanations in Assyrian are published in V R., 47. It has been repeatedly translated in whole or part; see especially Zimmern, in Schrader's Die Keilinschriften und das Alte Testament, 3te Auf., p. 385, and also in Babylonische Hymnen und Gebete (Der Alte Orient, vii, 3), pp. 28ff.; Jastrow, Die Religion Babyloniens und Assyriens, ii, pp. 125ff.; Dhorme, Choix de Textes Religieux Assyro-Babyloniens, pp. 372ff.; Ungnad in Gressmann, Altorientalische Texte und Bilder, i, pp. 92, 93. A résumé by Jastrow, in ZA, xx, pp. 191ff. A portion of the third tablet has been published recently by R. Campbell Thompson, PSBA, 1910, pp. 18ff. The suffering hero seems to have been an ancient king, Tâbi-utul-Bêli, whose name is preserved in a philological commentary on this text. V R. 47, Rev. 5.

 that is good with god,
 in heaven?
 who shall establish it?
 the way of the gods!
 is in the morning dead,
 suddenly is he smitten;
 he is singing and playing,
 he is howling like a complainer.
 so are their thoughts changed,
 and are like a corpse,
 and are like unto god.

7. AN INCANTATION WITH ETHICAL CONTENTS¹

[INCANTATION. I invoke you], ye great gods,
 . . . God and goddess, lords of atonement,
 On account of N, son of N, whose god is N, whose goddess is N,

He is sick and afflicted, full of pain and trouble.

- 5 Has he offended his god, has he offended his goddess?
 Has he for consent² spoken denial, has he for denial spoken consent?

Has he pointed with the finger?

. , while he spoke vainly?

. whispering,

- 10
 Has he despised his god, has he despised his goddess?

[.], has he spoken evil?

[.], has he spoken hatefully?

[.], has he spoken unlawfully?

¹ Published by Zimmern, Die Beschwörungstafeln Shurpu, Beiträge zur Kenntniss der Babylonischen Religion (1901), and also translated, pp. 1ff., and by Ungnad in Gressmann, Altorientalische Texte und Bilder, i, pp. 96ff., and portions of it, with comment, by Rogers, Religion of Babylonia and Assyria, pp. 157ff. This incantation forms the second of the nine tablets composing the Shurpu (i. e., Burning) series. These incantations are intended to remove bans and curses of all kinds, through ritual ceremonies, in which various objects are burned. The interest of this particular tablet is found especially in the very high ethical ideas mingled promiscuously with primitive views of demoniacal forces. The man wishes to be delivered from his afflictions, but the exorciser seeks first to know what guilt has brought these upon him.

² The words here translated "consent" and "denial" are extremely difficult to render. The former is cognate with the Hebrew יָרַח, grace.

S. FRAGMENT OF WISDOM LITERATURE ¹

OBVERSE:

5 . . . their freedom (?) shalt thou not take away,
Thou shalt not tyrannically oppress them.
With one, who thus acts, his god is angry,
He is not pleasing to Shamash, he will requite him with evil.

Give food to eat, give wine to drink,
10 Seek the truth, provide for and . . .
With him, who thus acts his god is pleased,

¹ A didactic poem, of which we possess several fragments. The principal fragment [K. 3364] was first studied by George Smith, who supposed it to be part of the Epic of Creation, forming an address of "the deity to the newly created man on his duties to his god" (Chaldean Genesis, p. 80), but this has been disproved by King, who published a much larger Neo-Babylonian fragment [BM 33851, parts of four columns]. The fundamental text is published by King, Cuneiform Texts of the British Museum, xiii, 29f., where the reverse and obverse were confused; the late duplicate in Neo-Babylonian, in King, Seven Tablets of Creation, ii, Plates lxiv-lxvi. Compare also vol. i, pp. 201-3. An important duplicate [K. 7897] was published by Macmillan, Beiträge zur Assyriologie, v, pp. 622-3, and the available texts combined and translated, pp. 557-62. Zimmern published a fragment [K. 8231] in the Zeitschrift für Assyriologie, v, pp. 622-3, vol. xxiii, p. 368f., which completes the Macmillan fragment materially. See also Delitzsch, Welt-schöpfungsepos, and Ungnad in Gressmann's Texte und Bilder, i, pp. 98-9.

- Thou shalt not slander, (but) speak kindly;
 5 Thou shalt not utter evil, but speak good.
 Him who slanders and speaks evil,
 As a recompense Shamash will wait for him (lit. his head).

- Open not wide thy mouth but guard thy lips;
 The words of thy thoughts speak not alone.
 10 If thou speakest quickly thou shalt take it back,
 And in silence must sadden thy mind.
 Daily present to thy god
 Sacrifice and prayer, appropriate to incense.
 Before thy god mayest thou have a tried heart.
 15 This is appropriate to the deity.

Prayer, petition, and prostration
 Every morning shalt thou render him, then will he give thee gifts
 And with god's help thou shalt be abundantly prosperous.

11. HYMN TO TAMMUZ¹

[The lord of destiny (?) abides no more], the lord of destiny (?) abides no more.²

¹ The text in the Sumerian language is published by King in Cuneiform Texts from Babylonian Tablets in the British Museum, xv, No. 18. It was first translated by Zimmern (Sumerisch-babylonische Tamuzlieder, Berichte der Königlich Sächsischen Gesellschaft der Wissenschaften. Band 59, 1907, pp. 226ff.). It has been again edited and translated by Langdon, Sumerian and Babylonian Psalms, pp. 317-321, and by Ungnad in Gressmann, Altorientalische Texte und Bilder, i, pp. 95, 96, and again by J. D. Prince, Journal of the American Oriental Society, xxx, pp. 95ff.

² The hymn is spoken by the goddess Ishtar as a lament for her consort. The expression "abides no more" means "abides no more on earth." The hymn is quite curious because of its refrains, "abides no more," etc. Compare Psalm 136.

Tammuz, the . . .] abides here no more, the lord of destiny (?) abides no more.

. . . . he of wailings abides no more, the lord of destiny (?) abides no more.

I am queen, my consort abides no more.

5 My Damu abides no more.

Dagalushumgalanna abides no more.

The lord of Aralu abides no more.

The lord of Durgurgurru¹ abides no more.

The shepherd, lord Tammuz abides no more.

10 The lord, shepherd of the folds, abides no more.

The consort of the queen of heaven abides no more.

The lord in the cattle stalls abides no more.

The brother of the mother Bêlit-šêri abides no more.

[He who causes] the sprouting (?)
of the Land abides no more.

LITURGICAL AND DOCTRINAL TEXTS

1. THE SUPPOSED BABYLONIAN SABBATH¹

(1) An evil day. (2) The shepherd of great peoples (3) shall not eat flesh, cooked upon the coals, or bread of the oven.² (4) The garment of his body he shall not change, he shall not put on clean (garments). (5) He shall not bring an offering. The king shall not ride in his chariot. (6) He shall not speak as a ruler (?). The priest shall not give a decision in the secret place. (7) The physician shall not lay his hand on a patient. (8) To issue a malediction it (the day) is not suitable. (9) At night (10) the king shall bring his gift before Marduk and Ishtar, he shall offer a sacrifice. (11) The lifting up of his hands³ will then be pleasing to god.

¹ The text is published IV R., 32f. This section applies to the 7, 14, 19, 21, and 28 days. It has been repeatedly translated. See, for example, Zimmern, Die Keilinschriften und das Alte Testament, 3rd edition, p. 593; Dhorme, Choix de Textes Religieux Assyro-Babyloniens, pp. 380, 381; Ungnad in Gressmann, Altorientalische Texte und Bilder, i, pp. 99, 100. The text is that for the seventh day, with variants for the other days.

² "Cooked upon the coals" means "boiled upon the fire"; the second clause means "baked in an oven."

³ That is, prayer.

2. THE PANTHEON

In early times the number of gods in the Pantheon increased rapidly, so that before the period of Hammurapi (about 2000 B. C.) more than sixty gods find mention.¹ Many of these deities are the importations of other peoples who came into Babylonia and founded homes, bringing their gods with them, while others go back to the remotest period of Sumerian life. Many are mere duplications. Every city would have a moon god and a sun god, and the names given to them would often vary in different places. For a long time these divine names increased rather than diminished in number, even though from time to time one god was absorbed by another when one city conquered another. There was also a marked tendency to increase the divine names by adding various attendants to the god, who waited upon him as servants upon earthly masters; thus, for example, we find that in the temple of Esagila Marduk had two attendants who bore the descriptive names (ilu) Minâ-ikul-bêli, which means "(god) What will my lord eat?" and Minâ-ishti-bêli, "(god) What will my lord drink?"² By such accretions as these the number of the gods increased enormously, and the priests were forced to make lists of them in order to be sure of their rightful place and due honor. In the making of these lists a sort of classification was adopted, by which the names of minor deities, who are mere reflections of a great god, are identified as expressing certain aspects of his nature. An interesting specimen of this sort of classification is given below in the list of identifications of the god Bad (see A). It is to be specially noted that all these are minor deities except the great Ellil, of whom Bad was a mere reflection. Such identifications of goddesses are less frequent, except in the case of Ishtar, of which an interesting specimen is reproduced below (see B). These identifications, while interesting as showing a tendency to diminish the overpowering number of the gods, are relatively unimportant because the identifications are all made with minor deities. There is, however, one late Babylonian tablet in which the greatest of the gods are identified with Marduk (see C). This tablet has been the subject of a great controversy,¹ in which it has been freely argued that it is monotheism, or an approach to monotheism, or latent monotheism. It seems an unnecessary confusion in critical terminology to use the word "monotheism" at all in connection with the passage. It is quite plainly nothing but pantheism, and not even henotheism. We may quite properly speculate upon the probabilities of the appearance of henotheism among the later Babylonian philosophizing priests, but there is no evidence for even this in the present passage.

¹ Morris Jastrow, Jr., Die Religion Babylonien und Assyrien, i, pp. 51, 52. Compare Rogers, Religion of Babylonia and Assyria, pp. 78, 79.

² These names occur on K. 4332, which is published by King, Cuneiform Texts, xxiv, Plates 12-17. Compare also on these divine names, ib., p. 5.

¹ The tablet was first published by Pinches, Journal of the Transactions of the Victoria Institute, 1896, p. 8, who argued that it was "at least an approach to monotheism" (ib., p. 11). It was then taken up by Delitzsch (Babel u. Bibel, p. 49), who supported him. This led to the famous Babel-Bibel controversy, the chief papers in which are the following:

Eduard König, Bibel und Babel, Eine kulturgeschichtliche Skizze, 6te Auf. Berlin, 1902.

Karl Budde, Das Alte Testament und die Ausgrabungen. Giessen, 1903.

Karl Budde, Was soll die Gemeinde aus dem Streit um Babel und Bibel lernen. Leipzig, 1903.

Fritz Hommel, Die altorientalischen Denkmäler und das Alte Testament. Berlin, 1902.

Alfred Jeremias, Im Kampfe um Babel und Bibel, 3te Auf. Leipzig, 1903.

Samuel Oettli, Der Kampf um Bibel und Babel.

Heinrich Zimmern, Keilinschriften und Bibel. Berlin, 1903.

On this particular tablet compare also Zimmern in Schrader, Keilinschriften und das Alte Testament, 3te Auf., p. 609, who finds in it "einen an monotheistische oder wenigstens henotheistische Anschauung streifenden Grundton," but continues that "von einem Durchbruch zu wirklichem Monotheismus in Bereiche der babylonischen Weltanschauung nicht eigentlich die Rede sein kann." But Jeremias (The Old Testament in the Light of the Ancient East, p. 85) finds a "latent monotheism" in it and other passages. King also (Cuneiform Texts, xxiv, p. 9) speaks of it as "a still further step in an advance toward monotheism."

The priests remained polytheists to the end, as the vast masses of religious literature plainly shows. None the less are these speculations interesting and important as showing efforts after a simplification of the cumbrous Pantheon.

3. THE GODS OF THE MONTHS ¹

Nisánu² : of Anu and Ellil.
 Âru : of Ea, lord of men.
 Simánu³ : of Sin, first son of Ellil.
 Du'ûzu⁴ : of the hero Ninib.
 5 Âbu : of Ningishzida, lord of justice (?).
 Ulûlu : of Ishtar, queen [of battle(?)].
 Tashritu⁵ : of the hero Shamash.
 Arakhsamnu⁶ : of the wise one of the gods, Marduk.
 Kislimmu : of the great hero Nergal.
 10 Tebêtu : of Papsukal, vizier of Anu and Ishtar.

¹ Published in IV R., 33, repeated with some additions in the second edition.

² Nisánu means "beginning." The Babylonian New Year began with the time of the vernal equinox; the Jewish year, on the other hand, began about the time of the autumnal equinox, but during the Babylonian captivity the Jews adopted the Babylonian calendar and continued its use until the first century B. C., when the old Jewish year was readopted and is still maintained.

³ Pronounced Sivánu. See Zeitschrift für Assyriologie, ii, p. 265.

⁴ Du'ûzu for Dumuzu or Tūmuzu, i. e., Tammuz. See ib., p. 270.

⁵ Tashritu means "beginning" (the same as Nisánu), and points, therefore, to an old calendar in which the year began with the autumnal equinox.

⁶ Arakhsamnu means "eighth month"; Heb., Marchesvan, for Merachshaven, a change due to transposition of vowels. See Zeitschrift für Assyriologie, ii, p. 266. On the names see further Haupt, Purim, Beiträge zur Assyriologie, vi, 32.

4. THE DOCTRINE OF SUBSTITUTION

A¹

To the wise man he spoke:²

A lamb (?) is a substitute for a man,

A lamb he gives for his life,

The head of the lamb he gives for the head of the man,

The neck of the lamb he gives for the neck of the man,

The breast of the lamb he gives for the breast of the man.³

¹ A fragment in Sumerian and Assyrian published IV R., 26, No. 6, and again in the 2d edition, 26, No. 6, with some duplicates in the Additions and Corrections, p. 5. A more complete edition in Cuneiform Texts, xvii, p. 37. Translated by Zimmern in Schrader, Keilinschriften und das Alte Testament, 3te Auf., p. 597, and by Ungnad in Gressmann, Altorientalische Texte und Bilder, i, p. 101.

² The preceding part is unintelligible, but the god Ea is mentioned, as he is also at the end (see line 15 of the text below).

³ From the fragmentary ends of the lines shown below it is plain that it enumerated some other part of the body in the next line, perhaps the feet, which are mentioned in a ritual text in Cuneiform Texts, iv, p. 4.

B¹

A somewhat similar set of ideas appears in the treaty made between Mati-el, of Arpad, and Ashur-nirari, king of Assyria (754-745 B. C.). The following are the significant lines. After the treaty had been arranged a ram is sacrificed, which represents Mati-el, the different parts of its body standing severally for the corresponding parts of his.

¹Text not published, transliteration and translation by Peiser, Studien zur orientalischen Altertumskunde, Mittheilungen der Vorderasiatischen Gesellschaft, 1898, No. 6, pp. 228ff. Compare Zimmern in Schrader, Keilinschriften und das Alte Testament, 3te Auf., p. 597.

This head is not the head of the ram . . .
It is the head of Mati-el . . .
 The head of his children, his nobles, the people of his land.
 If Mati-el break this covenant
 As the head of this ram is cut off . . .
 . . . his teeth laid in his mouth
 The head of Mati-el shall be cut off . . .

5. THE SCAPEGOAT¹

A partial parallel to the scapegoat which was sent away to Azazel in the wilderness (Lev. 16. 8, 10, 20-22, 26) is found in the sheep slain for purification of the temple and then the body cast into the river. The parallel is by no means perfect, but it has certain of the same features.

¹Published, transliterated, and translated by Dhorme, Revue d'Assyriologie et d'Archéologie Orientale, viii, pp. 41ff.

REVERSE:

- 10 The Irrishu shall give the order and cut off the head of the sheep.
 With the body of the sheep the Mashmashu shall purify the temple.
 He shall recite the incantations to exorcise the temple.
 He shall purify all the naos in its circumference, then shall he take away the platter.
 The Mashmashu shall carry away the body of the sheep,
 15 And shall place it in the river Na-la, at evening.
 And cast into the river the body of the sheep.
 He shall depart into the country. The Irrishu, the head of the sheep . . .
 The Mashmashu and the Irrishu shall depart into the country. All that Which belongs to Nabu, lord of Babylon, they shall not introduce into Babylon.
 20 From the fifth to the twelfth day, they shall remain in the country.

3. A CHRONICLE CONCERNING SARGON AND OTHER EARLY BABYLONIAN AND ASSYRIAN RULERS¹

Sargon, king of Agade, by Ishtar's royal insignia was exalted,

And he had no rival or enemy. His glory he poured out over the world.

The sea of the East² he crossed,
And in the eleventh year his hand subdued the Country of the West in its full extent.

5 He united them under one control; he set up his images in the west;

Their booty he brought over at his word.

He settled the sons of his palace for five biru around,

And over the hosts of the world he reigned supreme.

Against Kaçalla he marched, and turned Kaçalla into mounds and ruins;

10 He destroyed within it, leaving not a bird's resting place.

Afterward in his old age all the lands revolted against him,

¹ First published, with transliteration and translation, by L. W. King, Chronicles Concerning Early Babylonian Kings, ii, pp. 3-24.

² The Sargon Omen tablet reads here "sea of the west," which is probably wrong. The sea of the east, which is the Persian Gulf, seems much more probable than the sea of the west, which is the Mediterranean. See further King, op. cit., i, p. 37f.

And they besieged him in Agade; and Sargon went forth to battle and accomplished their defeat;
Their overthrow he brought about, and their wide spreading host he destroyed.

Afterward he attacked the land of Subartu in his might, and before his arms they bowed down,

15 And Sargon quelled that revolt, and accomplished their defeat;

Their overthrow he brought about, and their wide
spreading host he destroyed.

Their possessions he caused to be brought into Agade.

The soil he removed from the trenches of Babylon,
And the boundaries of Agade he made like those of Babylon.

20 But because of the evil which he had committed the great lord Marduk was angry,

And he destroyed his people by famine.

From the rising of the sun unto the setting of the sun
They rebelled against him and gave him no rest.

A table of chronology covering the reigns of the Babylonian, Assyrian, and Persian kings of the period comprised in this work is placed at the end of the book, as a convenient summary of the present state of knowledge on the subject. Students should make attempts at the construction of chronological systems from the data given in these chronological materials, without consulting the tables printed at the end of the book, seeking to reconcile these data with the chronological materials in the Old Testament. The literature of the subject is extensive, and only the most important books are here cited.

HISTORICAL TEXTS

I. HAMMURAPI

The city of Babylon was one of the early cities of Babylonia, and the allusions to it in the days of Sargon I seem to imply that it achieved a position of influence even in the earliest period. It was, however, displaced by its rivals, and for many centuries we either hear nothing of it at all, or discern it as the center of a district in a kingdom ruled from another city. For centuries Ur was the chief city in Babylonia, to be followed in its turn by Isin and then by Larsa. Babylon had produced no man able to conquer these kingdoms and lift his city into hegemony over them.

About two thousand years before Christ there began to rule in Babylon a dynasty one of whose kings was able to bring his city to a position of such power that it was able to conquer both the south and the north. From that time the influence of the city extends almost without a break to the period of the Seleucides. No capital in the world has ever been the center of so much power, wealth, and culture for a period so vast. It was Hammurapi who made Babylon so great, and Hammurapi must ever be counted among the greatest kings who have ever ruled among men, whether he be considered as a conqueror in battle, as a statesman welding diverse city kingdoms into one, as a builder of great public works, or as a ruler codifying custom into law and enforcing public justice over all his domain.

The preparations for Hammurapi, as so often in human history, seem inadequate. The Babylonian King Lists give some names of rulers, of whom in some cases we know nothing, and are able, perhaps justly, to infer that there was very little to know. The first name in the dynasty is Sumu-abu, of whom we know nothing. The next is Sunu-la-ilu, who is not called the son of the predecessor, and from whom also no historical inscriptions have come down to us. He was succeeded by Zabû, his son, who erected a temple in Sippar. It is curious to observe that in the various business documents which have come down to us from this period, none of these rulers is called king. Apil-Sin, who follows, is also without this title, and Sin-muballit is only so called in a passing allusion in one tablet. It seems a fair inference, from all the facts that are accessible to us, that these rulers were not kings at all, but princes in Babylon, raised by later ages to the dignity of kingship in order to provide a dignified background for the great king Hammurapi. Not until he arose did the dynasty of Babylon really begin. His predecessors are shadowy names; he is a living personality. No king like unto him had arisen before him, and none quite his equal in all sides of his nature was ever to arise in Babylonia after him. Other kings had indeed made empires, as Sargon, but they were of short duration, and posterity had no great influences to ascribe to them.

Hammurapi did not reach his dignity and influence without a long struggle, and however strongly we feel his force as a statesman, we must remember that he was first of all a soldier. When he came to rule in Babylon his city acknowledged the overlordship of the Elamites, who had long been ruling in Babylonia. They had built great buildings, and so evidenced their hold and indicated their determination to continue in the land; but in spite of all their power and the superiority of their actual position, Hammurapi was able to break in pieces the Elamite rule and at the same time deprive the ancient centers of southern Babylonia, not only of their hegemony, but even of their autonomy.

It is not easy to form a perfectly clear picture of the relations of Elam and Babylonia and be at the same time certain that all its details correspond exactly to the facts as they really occurred. Perhaps the following outline may be regarded as sufficiently supported by the fragmentary remains which have come down to us.

In the very earliest times Elam was independent of Babylonia, but was successively overrun and plundered by Babylonian kings. In different years we find Urumush, Sargon I, and his son Naram-Sin and Gudea all as plunderers of Elam. Dungi married one of his daughters to a Patesi of Anshan, a district of Elam. At this time it seems clear that the rulers of Elam were named Patesi, and acknowledged the kings of southern Babylonia as their suzerains; they wrote their inscriptions in Babylonian and seems to have adopted the civilization of the great valley. About 2280 an Elamite ruler, Kutur-nakunte, made a raid into Babylonia and carried away the goddess Nana out of Uruk. After this event we lose the thread of the history and find the Elamites about 2000 B. C. in actual possession of Babylonian cities. At this time the ruler of Elam is Simtihilhak, who is the suzerain over Kudur-Mabuk, who bears the title of adda of Amurru, claiming thereby the rule over the west as far as the Mediterranean, and also adda of Emutbal, a province of western Elam. A son of Kudur-Mabuk, called Arad-Sin in the Semitic inscriptions, but whose name in Sumerian may be read Eri-Aku, had established himself as king of Larsa, and in his inscriptions claims authority over Ur, Eridu, Nippur, Shirpurla, and Uruk. He is the king who is referred to in Gen. 14 as king of Ellasar, associated with Chedor-laomer. The name "Chedorlaomer" corresponds to the name "Kudur-lagamaru," and the situation presupposed in Gen. 14. 1 is that this Chedorlaomer, whose name has not yet been found on any early Babylonian historical text, was now the overlord of all Babylonia, and that Amraphel, in whom we must see Hammurapi, and Eri-Aku, and Tidal, king of the Goyyim, who is probably intended for Tudhkhula, king of Gutium, were his tributaries or allies. To this situation no contemporaneous documentary proof has yet been produced, but it conflicts with no known facts, and suits the general situation. To say more than this would be unscientific and probably also unwise.

Whatever the relations of the various rulers in Babylonia may have been to each other and to Elam, the issue of the struggle for supremacy is clear. Under Hammurapi the Babylonians threw off the Elamite yoke and drove those who had so long held it in the southern cities back into Elam, whence they were able to make no further attack upon Babylonia for centuries.

The victory over Arad-Sin (Eri-Aku) is the climax of the struggle with the Elamites, and the way was now open for the conquest of all the rest of Babylonia and its reduction beneath Hammurapi's sway. Northern Babylonia was also reduced, and the city of Babylon, which had long filled a position subordinate to others, now began the career which fills all ancient history and literature with its glory. It was now to begin the history which should make it later known as the "mother of the Chaldeans" (Jer. 50. 12), the "Chaldaicarum gentium caput" (Pliny, Hist. Nat., 6, 30), and the "beauty of the Chaldees' pride" (Isa. 13. 19).

As soon as his kingdom was conquered Hammurapi began a series of public works of the highest importance.

He made great canals, which supplied southern Babylonia with abundant water for agriculture; he united Sippar with the Euphrates by a canal which brought the river-borne commerce to its doors; he organized the system of canal conservancy so that the waterways were not choked with the rank growth of a semi-tropical climate; he erected in Babylon a great granary for the storing of wheat against times of famine—a work of mercy as well as of necessity; he rebuilt the walls of defense about Sippar, making them like a great mountain; he prepared for himself a royal residence near Baghdad, and restored and enlarged the temples of Esagila in Babylon and of Ezida in Borsippa. But above all these material works is he to be remembered as the king who gathered the scattered laws of his people, enlarged their scope, and uttered the great code of laws with which his name is now certain to be connected while time lasts. Great as a lawgiver, he was equally great as an administrator, for his numerous letters and dispatches show how carefully he established justice and maintained the right in even the smallest affairs of everyday life. The ancient Orient knows no king of his commanding stature and importance; he is without a rival when all the sides of his abounding activity are compared with the achievements of any other monarch.

II. THE TELL-EL-AMARNA PERIOD (1400 B. C.)

I. THE DISCOVERY OF THE LETTERS

In 1888 there was made in Egypt a most surprising discovery of letters and dispatches written almost wholly in the Babylonian script and language. A peasant woman living in the wretched little mud village of Tell-el-Amarna, on the eastern bank of the Nile, about one hundred and sixty miles south of Cairo, was searching for antiquities among the sand and rubbish of a great Tell some distance back from the river. She did not know that beneath this sand lay all that remained of the temple and palace of the great heretic king of Egypt, Amenophis IV, or, as he called himself, Ikh-en-Aton.¹ Her object was only to find stone or brick for repairs to her squalid house, or anteeka, which might be sold to the strange people from Europe or America, who buy things simply because they are old. In the mound she found the dried and worm-eaten remains of ancient wooden record boxes, and from these she extracted more than three hundred inscribed clay tablets and fragments of tablets, some of them only $2\frac{1}{8}$ inches by $1\frac{1}{8}$ inches, while others are $8\frac{3}{4}$ inches by $4\frac{7}{8}$ inches and even larger. Fearing that they would be confiscated by the Egyptian government, she concealed them, with the aid of some relatives, and then proceeded with surreptitious negotiations for their sale. They sent some to Dr. Jules Oppert, in Paris, doubtless hoping that he might induce their purchase by the Louvre. By some strange excess of caution he pronounced them forgeries; while M. Grebaut, then head of the Department of Antiquities, paid no attention to some which were drawn to his attention. Discouraged by all efforts to effect an advantageous sale, and fearing that the find would prove almost valueless, they broke some of the larger tablets into three and four pieces, in the hope of selling each piece to tourists at a price as great as the whole tablet would have secured. Some of the tablets were imperfectly baked, and when a great bag full of tablets of all sizes was sent to Luxor to be hawked about among antiquity dealers many were ground to powder and lost to the world.

At last, long after many tablets had disappeared or been destroyed, one hundred and sixty, some very large and in perfect condition, others mere fragments, were bought by Herr Theodore Graf, of Vienna, and sold by him to Herr J. Simon, of Berlin, who presented them to the Royal Museums in the German capital, where they are now safely deposited. Eighty-two were bought for the trustees of the British Museum by Dr.

E. A. Wallis Budge; sixty came into the possession of the Cairo Museum, while still others fell into private collections like the Murch and Rostowicz. These priceless texts are therefore widely scattered, when there can be no doubt that their proper study would be much better prosecuted if they were all in one place, as they would be if they had been discovered by scientific investigators. Furthermore, many, perhaps a large number, have been destroyed by careless and ignorant handling. We must always expect just such an issue so long as the natives of Egypt, Babylonia, Syria, and Asia Minor are permitted to plunder at will the buried remains of ancient civilizations.

When the more than three hundred tablets came into the hands of museum officials in Berlin, London, and Cairo a glance speedily revealed their character. They were letters from monarchs of western Asia, like Kadashman-Kharbe, king of Babylonia; Ashurballit, king of Assyria; and Tushratta, king of Mittanni, to Amenophis III, or Amenophis IV, kings of Egypt, or they were dispatches from various governors or princes in Syria or Palestine, Philistia, or Phœnicia to these same Egyptian kings, whom they acknowledged as lawful rulers or suzerains over their territories. The importance of these documents was recognized at once, and the minute study to which they have since been subjected has only confirmed the first estimate of their value.

Before we can set them in their proper relations to biblical literature it will be necessary to take a wider view of their historical origin.

II. EGYPT AT THE TELL-EL-AMARNA PERIOD

The two kings of Egypt, Amenophis III and Amenophis IV, who received or dispatched the Tell-el-Amarna letters, belonged to the eighteenth dynasty, which had at its beginning given Egypt the promise of a fresh development by driving out her foreign conquerors, the Hyksos (about 1580 B. C.). The sixth king of the dynasty was Thothmes III (1503-1449), who in a series of brilliant campaigns conquered the whole of Syria and Palestine and extended Egyptian dominion as far as the Gulf of Iskanderun. At this time the Syrians stood at a higher stage of civilization than even the wonderfully gifted race of Egypt. The plunder carried back to Egypt of coats of mail, of gold-plated chariots, of chariots inlaid with silver, witnesses to an industrial and artistic development that was able to teach Egypt. With all these precious goods went captives, who fell to working in the Nile valley at the crafts to which they were accustomed at home, and as they worked they taught the Egyptians. But a stream of influence such as this could not be confined within a narrow channel, and soon all Egypt was overflowed with Semitic influences born, not merely in Syria, but even in Babylonia, far distant though it was. The Syrian craftsmen worked so well in Egypt that their wares changed even the taste of the Egyptians, while the language was Semitized, and the method of writing gradually developed into a smooth-flowing and graceful style. Under the great influx of foreign blood even the features of the conquering race were changed into a less bold and more delicate form. Egypt had never known such changes since the beginning of the monarchy. Thotmes III had indeed extended his conquests in other directions, so that all Nubia owned his sway, but no such flood of change came from that quarter.

The reign of Amenophis II (1449-1423), which immediately followed, continued the policy which made the Semitic influence more powerful in the country. He made early in his reign a raid into Syria, to establish his authority, and then enjoyed twenty years of peace, in which the commerce with his Syrian dominions had free course. His successor, Thotmes IV (1423-1414), had but a brief reign, which appears to have been spent chiefly in maintaining the control in Syria and in Nubia which had been won by his predecessors.

Amenophis III (Amenhotep—1414-1379) succeeded his father immediately, though he was probably still a youth. In his fifth year he made an expedition to Ethiopia, and during the remainder of his life pursued only the paths of international peace. During all these years the Semitic influence in Egypt continued, seeking and finding ever new channels. We learn about the tenth year of his reign that he has already married Tiy, an untitled Egyptian, and a woman of force and character, and in this year he is married to Gilukhepa, sister of King Tushratta, of Mittanni. In his reign the correspondence with Semitic kings and princes begins. The Tell-el-Amarna record cases have preserved for us letters from Babylonia written by Kadashman-Kharbe, from Tushratta, king of Mitanni to Amenophis III, who is always addressed by his prænomen Nimmuria (Egyptian NEB-MAAT-RA), and these deal almost entirely with royal marriages or furnish other evidences of constant intercourse between the two kingdoms. The real queen of Egypt was Tiy, who is always associated with the king in his acts of dominion, but his other wives from foreign lands were probably also influential. All these signs of external influence pointed forward to a great historic crisis in the fortunes of Egypt, which came in the ensuing reign.

The reign of Amenophis III is distinguished by the most extensive and beautiful works of building, and every relic of the period which has come down to us bears witness to the prosperity which the entire kingdom enjoyed during this brilliant and peaceful period. During his later years he was negotiating a marriage for his son, born of Queen Tiy, who was to succeed him under the style of Amenophis IV, with the prænomen Napkhurariya (Egyptian, NEFER-KHEPRU-RA). There appears to have been some slight difficulty about the succession, for Queen Tiy apparently reigned alone for a short time.

Soon after his accession Amenophis IV (1383-1365) married the daughter of Tushratta, king of Mitanni, by name Tatukhepa (Nefertiti). In his sixth year came the great event foretold by the long-continued Semitic influence. The king changed his faith and became a worshiper of the Solar Disk, forsaking the great god Amen, to whom his fathers had long paid homage. The paramount influences in producing the change were probably his mother, Tiy, his wife, and the philosophizing priests, of whom the favorite was Eye. The new faith expressed itself in hymns¹ of great beauty, in which the life-giving power of the sun's rays is celebrated, and the king put forth tremendous efforts to establish the faith among his people. A new city, bearing the king's name, was erected, and thither the court transferred its residence from Thebes.

In the new city the king reigned surrounded by his wife and daughters, who are associated with him in all his enterprises. There also went on the correspondence with the kings of Babylonia, and Mittanni, and with the governors, who represented Egypt in Syria. It was the record chamber of Amenophis IV that was discovered at Tell-el-Amarna, and to it we owe the knowledge of the intercourse between Egypt and the north.

When the king died the court went back at once to Thebes, and the body of Amenophis IV was laid away in his own tomb in the valley near Tell-el-Amarna, in a lonely spot seven miles back from the river. The city which he built was deserted and fell rapidly into decay, and but for the suddenness of its forsaking and the speed of its passing from memory we should hardly be in possession of the king's private correspondence. His conversion had made no permanent change in Egypt. Amen ruled on as he had before.

III. SYRIA AND PALESTINE AT THE TELL-EL-AMARNA PERIOD

The conquest of Syria and Palestine, which began under Thotmes III, made necessary the devising of a plan for the governing of these valuable provinces. The plan which was ultimately adopted may be properly regarded as having grown directly out of the conquest itself. Some of the cities had resisted Egypt to the bitter end, and had to be completely destroyed and then rebuilt; such were Dunip (Heliopolis-Baalbek) and Qatna (in the Antilebanon region), which received a complete Egyptian organization, including the Egyptian religion. Other cities which had not been thus remade received princes, who were probably usually chosen by the Pharaoh from men previously prominent in the city or tribe because of rank or influence. Such a man was Abdikheba, of Jerusalem, who boasts that he had not inherited his position of governor, but had been appointed by the great king.

In yet other portions of the country the native ruler, descended in some local royal line, was simply retained and called prince (amêlu). None of these rulers is called king, and none of them was free to exercise rule over his city or province in internal affairs any more than in external. They were all under the direction of an officer (rabiš), who may have lived in the country, or who, perhaps, only visited it as need might require.

The entire country of Syria and Palestine is roughly divided into two parts; the southern and much larger portion is called Canaan (Kinakhni, or Kinakhkhi) and comprised nearly the whole of Syria, Phœnicia, and Palestine. The remaining portion, comprising the great Lebanon region, is called Amurrû. Four fifths of the Tell-el-Amarna documents deal with these two lands of Canaan and Amurrû, and present a most striking picture of their political situation, more especially during the reign of Amenophis IV. During the long and peaceful reign of Amenophis III Egyptian power had not been felt on the borders of the king's Asiatic dominions, and without the menace of his troops the borders were not likely to be safe from invasion. The Tell-el-Amarna letters prove that the invasions which were destined to break the Syrian provinces of Egypt into pieces had already begun. A large number of the governors were making constant appeals to the king for aid against enemies who threatened the very existence of Egyptian dominion in Asia. The two enemies most dreaded were the Khatti, that is, the Hittites, and the Khabiri. The former are the same people who find frequent mention in the Egyptian inscriptions of a later period under the name of Kheta. Long before the Tell-el-Amarna period they had been pressing southward from Kappadokia into Syria. They were later to engage the Egyptian army of Rameses II at Kadesh on the Orontes, and win the recognized right to possess the land all the way south to Hermon. The powerful kingdom then founded endured in some of its remnants till the fall of Carchemish under Sargon II in 717 B. C. The name of "Hittites" is used in the Old Testament in a very wide sense, applying not only to the branches of the stem which inhabited the Lebanon at the time of Israel's entrance into Palestine, but also covering a subordinate clan settled in southern Palestine about Hebron. Of the existence of the latter there is no good reason to doubt, for similar clans, detached from the main body, appear elsewhere, one of which, for example, founded the kingdom of Mittanni, which fills so large a space in this same correspondence.

The Khabiri have proved much more difficult to locate. In the very beginning it was noted that the word itself is identical with the word "Hebrew," and a great controversy at once arose as to whether or not the Khabiri were the invading Hebrews under Joshua. The chronological difficulty did not prevent many from adopting this view.¹ But in reality it makes it quite impossible. There is no way in which the notices of the Khabiri can possibly be reconciled with the campaigns either of the book of Joshua or of the first chapter of Judges. A study of all the allusions to the Khabiri in these letters will, however, make clear that the word is applied simply to a stem which had not yet made itself a local habitation, but was still wandering in the land. In this sense Abraham was called a Hebrew, when he first appeared in Palestine. These Khabiri may indeed have been related to the stock which has come to bear the name "Hebrew" exclusively for us, but there is no positive proof of this.¹

Apart from the direct historical information of political affairs supplied by these letters, they are of the highest value as revealing the wide extent of Babylonian influence in western Asia. All these documents are written in Babylonian in every one of these Phœnician and Palestinian cities, though they are addressed to the king of Egypt. In other words, though the Egyptians had made a political reorganization of the country, they were not able to supplant the Babylonian tongue by their own.

New confirmation of the dominance of this Babylonian script and language is supplied by discoveries made in Palestine itself. In 1891, while excavating in the mount of Tell-el-Hesy (Lachish), Bliss found a cuneiform tablet, very similar in appearance to those found at Tell-el-Amarna, and written by Zimrida, prince of Lachish, who was already known to us in the Tell-el-Amarna tablets.

In 1902-1903 Professor Sellin,² of Vienna, made a very thorough exploration of the mound of Ta'aneq, in the plain of Jezreel, and in March, 1903, found two small tablets, one of limestone, the other of black burned clay, both covered with cuneiform characters and obviously letters. Near by lay two more clay tablets, badly broken, but apparently containing lists of family names.

1. LETTER OF BURRABURIAŠ TO AMENOPHIS IV¹

(1) To Napkhu'ruria, (2) king of Egypt, my brother, [speaks] (3) thus Burraburiash, king of Karaduniash, (4) thy brother. With me is it well. (5) With thee, with thy land, thy house, thy wives, thy children, (6) thy nobles, thy horses, thy chariots, (7) may it be exceeding well. (8) I and my brother have spoken (9) friendly with one another, (10) and have said this: (11) "As our fathers were, (12) so also will we be good friends." (13) But now my merchants, (14) who came up with Akhutabu, (15) remained behind in Canaan for business reasons. (16) After Akhutabu had gone on to my brother [i. e. to Amenophis]; (17) in the city of Khinnatuni of Canaan, (18) Shumadda, son of Balummê (19) [and] Shutatua, son of Sharatum, of Acco, (20) sent their men and slew my merchants, (21) and took away their money. (22) I have sent Azzu (?) to thee; (23) question him, (24) and let him inform thee. (25) Canaan is thy land, and its kings are thy servants. (26) In thy land violence has been done me. Punish them, and (27) the money, which they have taken away, restore, (28, 29) and slay the men who have

4. LETTERS OF ABDI-KHIBA OF JERUSALEM

A¹

(1) To the king, my lord, has spoken (2) Abdi-khiba, thy servant. (3) At the feet of my lord, the king, (4) seven and seven times do I fall. (5) What have I done against the king, my lord? (6) They have slandered me | (7) before the king, my lord, [saying] (8) "Abd-khiba has revolted from the king, his lord." (9) Behold, as for me, neither my father (10) nor my mother appointed me (11) in this place. (12) The strong arm of the king (13) introduced me into my father's house. (14) Why should I commit (15) an offense against the king, my lord? (16) So long as the king, my lord, lives, (17) shall I say to the officer of the king, my lord:—(18) "Why are you favorable to the (19, 20) Khabiri and unfavorable to the [native] princes?" for this reason, (21) they slander me before the king, my lord. (22, 23) Because I say:—"The territory of the king

To the king, my lord, has spoken Abdi-khiba, thy servant. At the feet of my lord, seven and seven times have I fallen. (4) I have heard all the words, which the king, my lord, (5) has sent . . . (6) [Behold] the deed, which . . . has done . . . (7) what shall I . . . (8) . . . news . . . (9, 10 broken off) (11) brought to the city Kelti. Let the king know (12) that all lands have declared enmity against me; (13) let the king therefore care for his land.

(14) Behold the territory of Gazri, that of Ashkelon, (15) and the city of La[chish] have given them (16) food, oil and all necessaries. (17) Let the king therefore look after the troops, and (18) send troops against the people, (19) who have sinned against the king, my lord.

5. THE LETTER FROM LACHISH ¹

This letter was found in the mound of Tell-el-Hesy (ancient Lachish) May 14, 1892, by F. I. Bliss, and awakened great interest because it obviously belongs to the same series as the Tell-el-Amarna letters and possesses the additional interest of having been actually discovered in the soil of Palestine.

See also Sayce, Palestine Exploration Fund, Quarterly Statement, 1905, pp. 167-169.

III. ASHURNAZIRPAL (885-860 B. C.)

The great advance of Assyria in the twelfth century B. C. under Tiglathpileser I carried its power far beyond the point which had been attained under Shalmaneser I (about 1300 B. C.), when the Assyrians first began to play a leading role in western Asia. Tiglathpileser dared even to push his campaigns all the way to the Phœnician coast, where he held court in Arvad, received presents even from Egypt, and sailed out upon the great sea. The threat which this campaign made against the west sufficed to disturb all the arrangement which had been made between the Hittites and the Egyptians during the reign of Rameses II, by which the former had secured an undisputed suzerainty and a free hand over the whole of northern Syria. The Hittite power had been waning, as had also the Egyptian, and there seemed to be every likelihood for the transfer of the hegemony from these two to the Assyrians. But the death of the great king put an end to his conquests, and his successors for centuries were unable to emulate his achievements.

During the period of comparative inactivity which followed the reign of Tiglathpileser I great changes in western Asia took place because of the absence of the Assyrian peril. The kingdom of Saul and David in Israel was founded and made considerable progress in internal development and in the achievement of external safety. In Damascus the original Amorite stock gradually gave place to a predominant Aramaic wave of migration, and about 950 B. C. Rezon became the founder of a new dynasty,¹ which came into conflict with Israel and seriously disputed its material advance. During this same period of Assyrian decline Israel entered into important relations with Tyre, and the whole face of the west was changed.

The revival of Assyrian power began in 885 B. C., when a king of extraordinary energy and power came to the throne who named himself Ashurnazirpal. The inscriptions which have come down from his reign preserve abundant historical material to display the course and conduct of his campaigns and the development of his policy. His standard inscription upon a monolith of alabaster contains, in three hundred and eighty-nine lines, an account, almost epic in grandeur, of his campaigns of blood and fire by which Assyrian power was carried to new heights.

His first campaigns were directed against the Mesopotamian communities along the Chabor and the eastern bank of the Euphrates. Thereafter he made a victorious invasion of the territories of Naïri, about the head waters of the Tigris and the Euphrates, by the latter of which in a grotto he left an inscription, as Tiglathpileser had done before him. During the next ten years he was chiefly engaged in further conquests in Mesopotamia and along the banks of the Euphrates. It was probably in 868, though the year is uncertain, that he began his invasion of the west. His course was almost due west to Carchemish, where King Sangara unsuccessfully opposed him. The Euphrates crossed, he had little opposition until he met the forces of the powerful little kingdom of Patin on the Orontes, whose capital city was Kunulua, under King Lubarna. From him he received a heavy tribute, and then crossed the Orontes and proceeded toward the west and then southward along the Lebanon into Phœnicia. On this successful march he received tribute from Arvad, Byblos, Sidon, Tyre, and ascending the Amanus (Anti-Lebanon), he cut cedar beams for use in his building operations at home. We do not know how far south along the coast this campaign extended, nor do we know at what point the stela, mentioned at the conclusion of the text following, was set up. It is not probable that he went further down the coast than the mouth of the Nahr-el-Kelb (the Dog River), which discharges into the Mediterranean at Beirut. There the ancient road over the Lebanon would invite him inland, and the tribute which he received from Tyre and Sidon may have been sent to him, as, indeed, these two cities frequently, if not usually, did send tribute to other conquerors at a distance, to prevent their near approach. The stela referred to above may have been set up on the banks of the Dog River, where there are no less than five such records by Assyrian kings.

Ashurnazirpal does not mention Israel. Had he gone much farther south he would have come into contact with the outposts of the northern kingdom, of which Omri was now king. He was preparing the way for the attack which was to come in the next reign.

After this important campaign there remains very little of achievement in his reign, which closes after brief campaigns in northern Mesopotamia. At the beginning of his reign Nineveh was his capital city, but after the sixth year his expeditions begin at Calah, which had been made the capital by Shalmaneser I, and which was now rebuilt and restored by Ashurnazirpal. There most of his important inscriptions have been found.

IV. SHALMANESER III (859–825 B. C.)

Shalmaneser III succeeded his father, Ashurnazirpal II, without question, and carried his father's policies far beyond the dreams of their originator. In him we meet the first Assyrian conqueror who made the conquest, and not merely the plundering, of the western states his policy.

The approach to the west was mediated by an attack upon the Aramæan settlements in the Euphrates valley, whose spirit had already been broken by the severe campaigning of his father. In 859, 858, and 857 Shalmaneser invaded this territory, of which the state of Bit-Adini¹ appears to have been most powerful. It was ravaged with displays of savagery after the fashion of Ashurnazirpal. Pyramids of heads were piled up by city gates and the torch applied to ruined villages. When all opposition had been beaten down the land was annexed to Assyria, placed under direct Assyrian rule, and re-peopled with Assyrian colonists.

Such success must certainly lead to an attack upon the far larger and richer Aramæan settlements along the Mediterranean. The states which must be attacked under this plan were Patin, lying between the Afrin and the Orontes; Hamath, on the Orontes; and, most powerful of all, Damascus. The king of Damascus at this time was Bir-idri (Ben-Hadad). He was ambitious for the hegemony over all the western territory, and it was perhaps this very ambition, or the jealousy which it inspired among the other states, which was adroitly used by the Assyrians to destroy the confederation for defense against Shalmaneser.

The first campaign (854) was doubtless carefully planned, but none the less was it a surprise to the Assyrian monarch. His march from Nineveh across the great valley to Pethor was a continuous triumph, and at Aleppo he was met with a surrender of the city without striking a blow. The first opposition was met within the little kingdom of Hamath, where three cities were taken and left in ruins. Shalmaneser then advanced to Qarqar,¹ where he was met by a most determined body of raw levies, composed for the most part of contributions from Hamath, Damascus, and Israel. To these were added details from Cilicia and Cappadocia, from Phœnicia and from Arabia and Ammon. The Assyrian story is of a great victory, in which the allies, according to the Monolith Inscription,² lost 14,000, while the Obelisk¹ Inscription makes the loss 20,500, and a third² account places it at 25,000, and a fourth³ increases it to 29,000. But there is no word of plunder, of tribute, or of the extension of Assyrian domination, and there can therefore be no doubt that the confederates, who fought for their homes, had defeated the Assyrian veterans.

Difficulties elsewhere, notably in Babylonia, prevented a renewal of the attack until 849, when again Damascus and Hamath, with their allies, defeated the Assyrians. In 846 Shalmaneser, feeling the seriousness of the situation, and being still determined to overwhelm the allies with the mere weight of numbers, and with an army which he claims numbered 120,000 men, met the same allies. His boast of victory is the same as before, but it is none the less clear that he was again defeated. The next attempt was made in 842 under circumstances much more favorable for the invaders. Bir-idri, who had been the real leader of the allies, was probably now dead, and Ahab and Joram, his successor, who had contributed their share to the defense, were no more. Jehu, a coward by nature, was king of Samaria, while the weak but cruel Hazael reigned in Damascus. The other states were too discordant in themselves and too fearful of the ascendancy of Damascus to join in any further united action. Tyre and Sidon sent Shalmaneser gifts, that their commerce might not be impeded by war, while Jehu by his gifts sought the aid of the conquering Assyrians against the people of Damascus, whom he regarded as enemies. Hazael was left alone to fight the battles in defense of men too ignoble or too foolish to protect themselves.

³ Berlin Inscription, line 16.

He fortified himself in Saniru (Hermon), but was defeated with heavy loss and compelled to retire upon Damascus and there stand a siege. Damascus was, however, not taken, and Shalmaneser had to content himself with cutting down the trees about the city, and with a raid into the Hauran. In 839 he made his sixth attack upon the west, but is able only to report that he took four of Hazael's cities. No such series of rebuffs had ever been received by an Assyrian monarch. In all these campaigns there was no conquest of the much-coveted west, there was no extension of Assyrian government, there was no glory for the Assyrian arms. Yet he had prepared the way, and the west, though unconquered, had suffered severe losses in its brave defense. Another Assyrian invader would find the road prepared for his march.

During the entire period of these wars in the west Shalmaneser was almost equally busied with the north and northwest, where the upper Tigris bursts through its mountain barriers. These valleys and hillsides had been devastated by Ashurnazirpal, but their reconquest by Shalmaneser had to begin in 860 at the beginning of his reign. The kingdom of Khaldia, as its inhabitants called it, or Urartu, as the Assyrians knew it, was full of new vigor, and was developing in many ways. It had adopted the Assyrian script, and was disputing Assyrian progress in no uncertain manner. In 857 Shalmaneser attacked this new kingdom again, and plunged through it from west to east. Similar expeditions took place in 850 and 833. Another expedition under the leadership of a Turtan, in 829, is, indeed, followed by great boasts of victory, for which there seem to be few good reasons, for the kingdom of Khaldia continued to prosper and increase.

An even more evident failure to achieve lasting results is found in the territory east and southeast of Assyria, the land of Namri, which was invaded in 859, 844, and 836, but these expeditions secured nothing but plunder.

The greatest achievement of the whole reign of Shalmaneser was in the south. The king of Babylonia, Marduk-nadin-shum, threatened by a rebellion in the southern part of his dominions, applied to Shalmaneser for aid. The opportunity was eagerly embraced, and Shalmaneser overran the Chaldean communities, crushed the rebellion, and reëstablished the rule of Marduk-nadin-shum, who reigned thenceforth under the protectorate of Assyria (852-851 B. C.).

In 829 a rebellion broke out in Assyria, and during its progress in 825 Shalmaneser died. The rebellion was finally crushed by his successor, Shamshi-Adad IV (825-812), whose reign was taken up with numerous campaigns intended to solidify the shattered empire.

In 812 Adad-nirari IV, grandson of Shalmaneser III, ascended the throne, and during his reign of nearly thirty years (812-783), crowded with campaigns, accomplished much for the restoration of Assyrian prestige. We are, unhappily, but poorly supplied with inscriptions of his reign, and are not able to trace his movements in detail, though, fortunately, the Assyrian Eponym Canon supplies us with chronological details sufficient to enable us to follow them in part. He seems to have invaded the west in 806, 805, 803,¹ and 797, and upon these expeditions claims to have received tribute from all the states on the seacoast from Tyre to Philistia and also to have so humbled Mari, king of ¹ The Canon merely says "against the sea coast"; see p. 229. This might mean the Persian Gulf coast. It is not quite certain, therefore, that the statement in the text is correct.

Damascus, as to secure heavy booty from him and to consider him thereafter as a subject king. In his reign, therefore, we may recognize the results of the work of Shalmaneser III. But there could be no real peace in these Syro-Phœnician states so long as the kingdom of Khaldia continued to hold sway in territory from which the invasion of northern Syria was so easy and so tempting. The removal of this great menace to his western and northwestern borders was not accomplished by him. He was much more successful in eight campaigns against the Medes, and in Babylonia he completely restored Assyrian supremacy and made a great stride forward in the amalgamation of Assyrians and Babylonians. His reign must be considered one of the greatest in the annals of his people.

(78) In the eponym year of Daian-Asshur in the month of Airu, on the fourteenth day I departed from Nineveh, crossed the Tigris [and] approached the cities (79) of Giammu on the Balikh. The fear of my dominion, the brightness of my powerful arms frightened them and they slew with their own arms Giammu their lord. (80) I entered Kitlala and Til-sha-mar-akhi. I brought my gods into his palaces [and] in his palaces I held festival. (81) I opened his treasury [and] found his treasures; his goods and possessions I plundered [and] carried away to my city of Asshur. From Kitlala

¹ The Assyrian form of the name is expressed by (ilu) IM-id-ri and the reading of the ideogram IM has caused much dispute. Schrader, Zimmern, and Ungnad have read it Adad-idri or Hadad-idri, but Delitzsch and Winkler, Bir-idri. Zimmern has now changed his mind (Benhadad, Hilprecht Anniversary Volume, Leipzig, 1909, pp. 299-303), and Langdon has supported him (Langdon, Pir-idri [Ben-Hadad] King of Syria, Expository Times, November, 1911, pp. 68, 69). The name seems originally to have been Bir-hadar; compare LXX, ὁἰος 'Aδερ. He is the king who is called Benhadad in 1 Kings 20. 1ff.; 2 Kings 6. 24; 8. 7-15.

² The total of these numbers makes eleven, and not twelve, and the total of all arms amounts to 3,940 chariots, 1,900 horsemen, 62,900 infantry, and 1,000 camels.

THE OBELISK INSCRIPTION¹

In the eighteenth of my years of reign I crossed the Euphrates for the sixteenth time. Hazael (98) of Damascus marched out to battle. One thousand one hundred and twenty-one of his chariots, [and] four hundred and seventy of his horsemen, with (99) his camp, I took from him.

ANNALISTIC FRAGMENT²

(1) In the eighteenth of my years of reign I crossed, for the sixteenth time, (2) the Euphrates. Hazael of Damascus (3, 4) trusted to the great number of his troops (5) and called out his troops in numbers. (6) Saniru,³ a peak in the Lebanon district, he made into (8) his fortress. I fought with him (9) and defeated him. Sixteen thousand (10) of his soldiers with arms (11) I destroyed with arms, one thousand one hundred and twenty-one of his chariots, (12) four hundred and seventy of his horsemen, with his camp, (13) I took from him. He fled to save (14) his life. I pursued him and (15) in Damascus, his royal city, shut him up.

⁴ This campaign was useful to Israel in affording her a short breathing spell from Aramæan attacks. For this reason Winckler (Geschichte Israels, p. 154) desires to apply to Adad-nirari the passage, "And the Lord gave Israel a saviour, so that they went out from under the hand of the Syrians" (2 Kings 13. 5), and Jeremias (Das alte Testament im Lichte des alten Orients, 2d edition, p. 517). Otto Schroeder has returned to this again, arguing (Orientalistische Literaturzeitung, 1912, No. 2, col. 63) that the Hebrew words saviour and helper are translations of second half of the Assyrian king's name. But the reference is surely to Jeroboam, as is made clear by 2 Kings 14. 26, 27. See on the passage Kittel, and also Benzinger.

VI. TIGLATHPILESER IV (745-727 B. C.)

There was a great civil war in Assyria in the year 746, and at its close there appeared a new order in the kingdom. Before it there had ruled a weak descendant of the ancient line of kings who had made the name of Assyria feared from the eastern mountains to the western sea. In his hands the power which had swept with a force almost resistless was a useless thing. When he was gone the sceptre was grasped by a hand as firm as ever had been known in the kingdom, and its every move was directed by a mind full of original creative impulse.

The new king was proclaimed under the name and style of Tiglathpileser in Assyria, and later under the name of Pulu¹ in Babylonia. He does not give the name of his father in any of his inscriptions, and it is quite clear that he was not a descendant of the royal line, but a usurper raised to the throne by his own ability.²

¹ The name in Assyrian is Tukulti-abal-ešarra, which signifies, "My help is in the son of Ešarra." The name in the Old Testament is written regularly Tiglathpileser, but appears erroneously written Tilgath-pilneser in 1 Chron. 5. 6, 26, and 2 Chron. 28. 20. The name is written exactly the same as in the former Hebrew writing in the inscription of Panammu found at Sinjirli (Ausgrabungen in Sendschirli, veröffentlicht vom Orient-Komitee zu Berlin, i, pp. 55ff.). The Ptolemaic Canon writes the name Poros; see p. 239.

² Winckler (Vorderasiatische Geschichte, p. 39) hazards the conjecture that he may have been a son of Adad-nirari IV, but marks it with a query. He gives no ground for the suggestion, nor do I know of any.

In the very first year of his reign Tiglathpileser found the opportunity for a display of his double skill as a general and as an organizer. Since 747 Babylonia had been under the rule of Nabonassar, who was unable to hold in check the Aramæans, who were invading the land from the south, threatening to engulf Babylonian civilization and supplant it with their own. They were in possession of Sippar and Dur-Kurigalzu, from which every semblance of Nabonassar's dominion had disappeared. It is probable that he had asked for the intervention of his powerful neighbor, for Tiglathpileser was hailed as a deliverer as he marched southward. He drove the Aramæans before him, and reorganized the administrative system of the country. Nabonassar retained, indeed, the royal title, but the real king was Tiglathpileser.

Two expeditions east of the Tigris speedily brought those great provinces of which Namri was the chief into subjection, but Media still remained practically independent.

During the period of Assyrian decline, before Tiglathpileser came to power, the kingdom of Khaldia (Urartu) had enjoyed a succession of kings whose prowess had gradually won all that had been lost to Assyria under the vigorous blows of Shalmaneser III. Sarduris II, perhaps the greatest of these kings, had broken down the whole circle of tribute-paying states dependent upon Assyria in the north. He had overrun the territory north of the Taurus and west of the Euphrates, and even dared to call himself king of Suri, that is, of Syria. Assisted by a coalition of several northern princes, he marched westward and seemed ready to make this claim good. Tiglathpileser accepted the challenge, and struck his first blow by laying siege to Arpad. Sarduris responded, not by attempting to assist the endangered city, but by striking directly at Assyria. Tiglathpileser turned upon him, and the two armies met in the south-eastern part of Kummukh,¹ where the Assyrians gained a victory and pursued the fleeing Sarduris as far as the Euphrates north of Amid. Arpad held out for three years (742-740), and when finally reduced it was made the first Assyrian province in Syria.² Immediately upon its surrender deputations from nearly all the Syro-Phoenician states arrived bearing presents in token of their acceptance of the overlordship of Assyria. The small state of Unqi continued in rebellion, and had to be brought into subjection by the capture of its capital, Kinalia. It received an Assyrian governor, and was formed into a province of the now rapidly growing empire. During the years 739-735 Tiglathpileser was busied with campaigns into Armenia and into Media. From the former were taken two districts, Ulluba and Kilkhi, to receive Assyrian governors, and so assist in holding back the kings of Khaldia from invasions of Syria.

As soon as the Assyrian army had been withdrawn from Syria the states which had sent tribute were quickly ready to unite in resisting any further payments to the new monarch of Assyria. It was natural enough to pay tribute when an Assyrian army was standing near by threatening reprisals; it was quite a different matter to send treasure away to Assyria when there was none to enforce its collection. Nineteen states united to resist the payment, emboldened by the absence of Tiglathpileser, among them Hamath, Damascus, Kummukh, Tyre, Gebal, Que, Melid, Carchemish, and

² An echo of this victorious campaign appears in 2 Kings 19. 11-13.

Samaria, while Azariah of Ja'udi¹ (Yaudi) was the leader among them. Tiglathpileser came west at once and captured "the city of Kullani,"² as the eponym canon informs us, but with the order of the campaign we are, unhappily, not fully acquainted because of the fragmentary character of the king's annals. The remaining states, except Yaudi, paid the tribute, and so for a time at least assured their security. The territory of the rebels, in its northern portion, received 30,000 colonists from Ulluba and Kilkhi, and thousands were carried out of it. Menahem of Israel paid a tribute of 1,000 shekels,³ which secured for him the continuation of his rule, but a new province was constituted in the north, and over it was seated as governor the son of Tiglathpileser, who afterward succeeded to the throne under the name of Shalmaneser.

The difficulties in the west were by no means concluded; they were, indeed, scarcely more than well begun. Damascus had sent tribute, but it had not surrendered, and no Assyrian king had set foot within its walls. Rezon was now king and was determined to hold out against the Assyrians to the last. The strategy of Tiglathpileser was of the highest order, and his plans for strangling Damascus proceeded steadily and resistlessly. In 734 he went straight to the coast of the Mediterranean, having crossed the plains of Syria near Damascus. His course was southward, and either Ashdod or Ekron was first taken, and then Gaza was approached. Hanno, the king, fled to Egypt, Gaza was taken and its gods and goods carried away to Assyria.

¹ The name "Azariah" corresponds exactly with the name of the King Azariah of Judah (2 Kings 15. 1, 2), called also Uzziah (2 Chron. 26. 1), and the name "Ja'udi," "Yaudi," corresponds perfectly with "Judah." It was natural, therefore, that, as they were contemporaneous, the King Azariah of these inscriptions should be accepted as the Azariah (Uzziah) of Judah; so Schrader argued (Keilinschriften und Geschichtsforschung, pp. 395-421), and so scholars generally agreed, as I also did myself (History of Babylonia and Assyria, ii, pp. 119ff.). It is now clear that this is incorrect. The land here referred to is a district of Sam'al (Zenjirli), of which Panammu was king, whose inscription, found at Zenjirli, repeatedly invokes the gods of Ja'udi (Ausgrabungen in Sendschirli I, Mittheilungen aus den Orientalischen Sammlungen, Königl. Museen zu Berlin, Heft xi, Berlin, 1893, pp. 64, 79). The credit of perceiving these facts belongs in the first instance to Winckler (Altorientalische Forschungen, i, p. 1, Das Syrische Land Jaudi und der angebliche Azarja von Juda).

² Kullani, the modern Kullanhou, located about six miles from Tell Arfad (Arpad). It appears in Isa. 10. 9 in the form Calno and in Amos 6. 2 is called Calneh. See Gray and Driver on the passages.

³ 2 Kings 15. 19.

Pekah was now king of Samaria, and the weak and vacillating Ahaz was on the throne of Judah which had so lately been occupied by Ahaziah. Even in the very presence of the Assyrian menace these western states were ever engaged in a game of small and selfish politics. Rezon of Damascus and Pekah now united to wreak vengeance upon Ahaz and enrich their own kingdoms. Helpless before such a threat, Ahaz appealed to Tiglathpileser for assistance, an appeal certain of a speedy hearing. Tiglathpileser determined to strike Samaria first, and immediately upon his reappearance in the west the Syro-Phœnician allies withdrew from southern Judah. Tiglathpileser apparently entered Samaria from the plain of Esdraelon, and took Ijon, Abel-Beth-Ma'aka, Janoah, Qadesh, and Hazor, and overran the whole of Gilead, Galilee, and Naphtali, carrying away large numbers into captivity.¹ Pekah was slain by a party of assassins, and Hosea appointed king in his stead by the Assyrian monarch.

Tiglathpileser was now free to turn to the far greater task of overcoming Damascus. Rezon met him and was defeated, making a very narrow personal escape. The whole country was desolated, Tiglathpileser boasting that he had destroyed at this time five hundred and ninety-one cities, whose inhabitants, numbering thousands, were carried away, with all their possessions, to

Assyria. At last, about the end of 732, Damascus fell into his hands.

The success of Tiglathpileser IV in the west had exceeded the dreams of Shalmaneser III, who first began these invasions. By his colonizing methods he had begun the assimilation of these diverse populations into one common whole. He had extended Assyrian commerce across the Euphrates valley and over all Syria to the Phœnician and Philistine cities. Had his people been native to the sea-coast, he might have undertaken to snatch the commerce of the Mediterranean. The concluding years of Tiglathpileser's reign were occupied in righting troublous situations in Babylonia. In 733 Nabonassar died and was succeeded by his son, Nabunadinzer, who died in the second year of his reign by the hands of an assassin, Nabu-shumukin, who reigned only one month, to be deposed by Ukinzer, a Chaldean prince of Bit-Amukkani. This was in 732, and Tiglathpileser was in camp before Damascus. In 731 he appeared determined to establish a new order. Ukinzer fled from Babylon on his approach, but prepared for a siege in his old capital of Sapia. Tiglathpileser was unable to take it, perhaps on account of the lateness of the season. It was taken in 730, and on New Year's Day, 728, Tiglathpileser was crowned king of Babylon. In the month of Tibet, 727, the great king died.

VII. SARGON II (722-705 B. C.)¹

Immediately on the death of Shalmaneser V, in the year 722, Sargon, who was not of the royal line, succeeded to the throne. In his brief but distinguished reign the kingdom of Assyria reached the very zenith of its power in western Asia. His contact with the west country, however, was somewhat less important for the biblical peoples than that of Sennacherib, his son and successor, or of Tiglathpileser IV, who preceded him by one reign.

The campaigns of Sargon, like those of Tiglathpileser, dealt chiefly with the north, that is, with Urartu or Chaldia, with the south, or Babylonia, and with the west, Syria and Palestine; and in their relative importance for Assyria they stood in the order named.

Immediately on the death of Shalmaneser V, in the year 722, the city of Samaria fell after a siege of three years.² Sargon claims the victory for himself, though he could not have been present at all, and, indeed, it is just possible that the city may have fallen while Shalmaneser still lived, and the news only reached Assyria after his decease.³ He deported 27,290 of the inhabitants and "placed them in Halah, and on the Habor, the river of Gozan, and in the cities [lxx, mountains] of the Medes,"⁴ whose places were later supplied by peoples brought from various lands conquered by the Assyrians.

In Babylonia⁵ there were problems of greater moment for Sargon than these affairs in the west. In 729 Merodach-baladan had paid homage to Tiglathpileser IV, and during the short reign of Shalmaneser V he remained quiet, though doubtless plotting rebellion at the first opportunity. Immediately on the change of dynasty, at the death of Shalmaneser, he seized southern Babylonia and then the city of Babylon, where he was proclaimed king on New Year's Day, 721. Sargon marched at once into the country and attacked Merodach-baladan and his ally, Khumbanigash of Elam at Dur-ilu, in northern Babylonia. Sargon claims a victory, though the sequel clearly proves that the result was at least indecisive. He did not take Babylonia from Merodach-baladan. The loss of prestige in his failure was a fruitful cause of rebellions elsewhere.

The severe punishment of Samaria did not prevent another rebellion in the west, for in 720 Ilu-bi'di (or Yau-bi'di), a king of Hamath, formed part of a coalition composed of Hanno, king of Gaza, Sib'e of Egypt, and the lately formed Assyrian provinces of Arpad, Simirra, Damascus, and Samaria.¹ Sargon attacked them in detail, first defeating Ilu-bi'di at Qarqar and then proceeding southward to engage Hanno and Sib'e at Rapikhu (Raphia). The victory was complete; Sib'e fled, Hanno was captured and carried to Assyria, while nine thousand and thirty-three of his people were deported.

Sargon had no further need to attack any Syrian or Palestinian state until 710. He had previously removed Azuri, king of Ashdod, for failure to pay tribute, and had set up in his place Akhimiti, his twin brother. He was deposed in a rebellion, and a certain Yamani

¹ It is interesting to note that this new rebellion in Samaria is not mentioned at all in the Old Testament.

(called also Yatna) became king. This was serious enough in itself, but it was only the outward expression of a much greater rebellion. Shabako had become king of Egypt about 715, and it may well have been due to his promises of aid that the new uprising was due. However that may be, it is certain that Arpad, Simirra, Damascus, and Samaria had joined in the rebellion, and, in spite of the efforts of Isaiah, Judah also yielded to the Egyptian wiles. Sargon made a forced march into the west, and Yamani fled to Egypt, to be later delivered up to Sargon by the king of Melukhkha. Ashdod, Gath, and Ashdudimmu received an Assyrian provincial government.

The next events in the reign of Sargon have no direct bearing upon his campaigns in the biblical territory. They may be summarized as follows:

During the years 719 and 718 Sargon invaded the north country of Urartu, or Chaldia, in the former year attacking successfully its eastern and in the latter its western borders.

The year 717 witnessed the fall of Carchemish, the last of the small states into which the once powerful Hittite empire had broken up.

In the years 716-712 Sargon directed a series of destructive attacks upon Rusas, king of Chaldia, which resulted in his death, and the addition of his desolated territories to Assyria as a province. In the same years Mita of Mushke, who had ventured to invade Que (Cilicia), was driven back into his own territory and a part of Melid (Melitene) was annexed to Kummukh and also made into an Assyrian province.

In 710 Sargon, feeling his borders sufficiently secure in other directions, entered vigorously upon an invasion of Babylonia. The conditions were exceedingly favorable for the Assyrians. Khumbanigash of Elam, who had given such signal aid to Merodach-baladan in 721, had died in 717, and his successor, Shutur-nakhundi (in Elamitic, Shutruk-nakhunte), gave none. Furthermore, the administration of Merodach-baladan had alienated many of his subjects, and had offended the powerful priesthood. Without external aid, and with only a divided support from his own people, he was compelled to flee. Sargon was received as a deliverer, and caused himself to be proclaimed as Shakkanak (governor) of Babylon.

In 706 Sargon dedicated the new city of Dur-Sharrukin, which he had built for his future residence, and in 705 he died of violence, and was "not buried in his house."¹

VIII. SENNACHERIB (704-682)

In the same month that Sargon died his own son ascended the throne and began the direction of the empire now become so great. Sennacherib had need to be greater than his father, as the burden of administration is heavier than the load of conquest; but, in spite of the boasting of his high-sounding inscriptions, he must be judged to be far inferior to Sargon in ability.

Sennacherib was received at once in Assyria as the legitimate king, but the Babylonians were not so compliant, but set up as their king a certain Marduk-zakirshumu, whom the Assyrian inscriptions derisively call the son of a slave. Whatever his origin may have been, he was clearly not the man of the hour, for he reigned only one poor month, when the forceful Merodach-baladan drove him from his seat and assumed the kingdom (702). He knew well that he would not be allowed to remain in possession of the ancient mother kingdom without a struggle, and he began his preparations for the inevitable assault of the Assyrian king. His first move was to send an embassy to Hezekiah, king of Judah, to congratulate him on his recovery from a severe illness. Plainly enough, the real motive was to stir up disaffection against Assyria and lay the foundations for a rebellion in the west. The sequel would seem to show that other countries were visited at the same time, and that even Egypt was approached. This embassy was probably an important factor in the rebellion of which both Assyrians and Hebrews have so much to tell.

Sennacherib paid no attention to the west, but, with the wisest possible tactics, marched at once into Babylonia. He met with no resistance on the long march until Kish, nine miles east of Babylon, was reached. Here Merodach-baladan had dared to draw up his forces and offer battle. He was completely routed and fled the country. Sennacherib treated the native Babylonians with much consideration, but savagely ravaged the Chaldean territory, from which the tormentor, Merodach-baladan, had come. The country was reorganized, and a Babylonian named Bel-ibni, who had been bred at the Assyrian court, was set up as king.

At the close of this campaign Sennacherib had to secure his borders by a raid among the Kassites and into Ellipi. He had now pacified, in the true Assyrian manner, the entire eastern section of his empire, and was prepared to meet the situation in the west.

The whole west was now ready for a rebellion against Assyria. Hezekiah had conquered the Philistines,¹ and had given thereby proof of his prowess, and he had added enormously to the defenses of Jerusalem by constructing an underground aqueduct which brought water into the city.² The kingdom of Judah had also a popular party, eager to cast off the Assyrian yoke and make an alliance with Egypt, while the small Phœnician and Philistine states had suffered such sore oppression at the hand of Assyrian governors that they too were ready for any desperate chance. It is difficult now to estimate truly the relative importance of all the incidents which led to the great breach, and it is easier to enumerate the different movements than to make sure of their relative order.

From Judah an embassy went to Egypt, and the Egyptians promised assistance.³ This was in itself a rebellion against Assyria, but the first outward stroke seems to have occurred in Ekron, where the inhabitants cast into chains their governor, Padi, and delivered him up to Hezekiah, who is thereby acknowledged as the leader of the uprising. Padi had been appointed governor by the Assyrians, and Sennacherib dare not permit him to be thus treated or the whole fabric of government by appointed deputy would collapse. In 701 he marched westward, and reached the Mediterranean coast in the neighborhood of Tyre. He did not, however, attack the city, whose reduction, without the possession of a naval force, would have been impossible. Contenting himself with ravaging its tributary cities on the mainland, he turned to Sidon. The king, Elulaeus (Luli), fled, and the city surrendered without a blow. It was used as the center of a new province, and Ethobal was set up as its king, with authority over the towns along the coast as far south as Acre. This success over Sidon had far-reaching effects, for deputations began to arrive bringing presents and pledges of fealty from a large number of small states which had joined in the rebellion. From Arvad and Gebal, from Ashdod and distant Moab, from Ammon and Edom came those whose hearts were faint. But though honeycombed with defections, the little confederation held out, and prepared for defense. Ashkelon was next reached and speedily taken, the former Assyrian king, Sharru-ludari, was restored to power, and Zidqa, who had supplanted him, was carried off to Assyria a prisoner. A similar fate befell Beth-Dagon, Bene-barqa, and Azuru.

The victorious columns had now an open road to Ekron, unless there was some demonstration from without. This was, however, afforded from an army from Egypt and Ethiopia,¹ perhaps under the leadership of Shabaka,² which advanced northward, intending to form a connection with the forces of Hezekiah. Sennacherib met and defeated this body at Eltekeh, and then, turning back, destroyed Ekron before moving on Judah. The Shephelah suffered severely, for he claims to have captured forty-six cities. Jerusalem was blockaded, but not taken. Lachish, as the famous relief shows, was besieged and taken. Sennacherib was probably recalled from the siege of Jerusalem by the troubles in Babylonia, which form the most characteristic mark of his reign.

¹ The words here translated "Egypt" and "Ethiopia" are Muṣri and Melukhka (see the text below, p. 342). The attempt of Winekler (Orientalische Forschungen, i, pp. 24ff., 195, 337, and Muṣri, Melukha, Ma'in, Mittheilungen der Vorderasiatischen Gesellschaft, 1898, pp. 1ff.), to identify these with portions of Arabia seems to me to have failed. See for an elaborate discussion of the matter, Olmstead, Western Asia in the Days of Sargon, pp. 57ff., and compare Budge, History of Egypt, vi, pp. xvff.; Breasted, History of Egypt (New York, 1905); Eduard Meyer, Die Israeliten und ihre Nachbarstämme (1906), pp. 455-471; Lehmann-Haupt, Israel, seine Entwicklung im Rahmen der Weltgeschichte (Tübingen, 1911), p. 103.

² Shabaka was the founder of the twenty-fifth, or Ethiopian dynasty, and is known to have been upon the throne at this time (see, e. g., Breasted, Ancient Records of Egypt, iv, p. 151, and ib., History of Egypt, p. 550.

Thus far we have depended entirely upon the Assyrian sources. We must now pay heed to the biblical, and with them begin the complications. The chief passage is found in 2 Kings 18. 13 to 19. 37. It appears again, however, in Isa. 36-39, with these two chief differences: that in Isaiah the verses which appear in 2 Kings 18. 14-16 are omitted, while, on the other hand, there is added in Isa. 38. 9-20 a so-called psalm of Hezekiah. The textual disturbances and differences are the same in so many places that there can be little doubt that the two do not come from a common source, but, rather, that the text of Kings is the original and the Isaiah text excerpted from it in an abridged form. This conclusion finds considerable support also from the presence of some of the characteristic diction of the book of Kings, such as "for my servant David's sake" (Isa. 37. 35; compare 1 Kings 11. 13, 32; 2 Kings 8. 19), "walked before thee in truth" (Isa. 38. 3; compare 1 Kings 2. 4; 3. 6), and others. Kuenen has conclusively shown, however, that the Isaiah text is decidedly the better preserved.¹ The chronological note in 2 Kings 18. 13, which appears also in Isaiah ("Now in the fourteenth year of king Hezekiah did Sennacherib king of Assyria come up against all the fortified cities of Judah, and took them"), is quite clearly the work of a redactor, and rests, not upon documentary evidence or tradition, but upon chronological calculation. It is quite irreconcilable with 2 Kings 18. 9 ("And it came to pass in the fourth year of king Hezekiah, which was the seventh year of Hoshea son of Elah king of Israel, that Shalmaneser king of Assyria came up against Samaria, and besieged it"), and may safely be disregarded. The date of Sennacherib's Judæan campaign is certainly 701, whatever the redactor of Kings may have calculated.

And now we come to the real crux of the situation. The redactor who put together the pieces which now make a continuous narrative evidently thought that everything in it applied to one campaign of Sennacherib—the campaign of 701—and so the passage is still interpreted by the majority of modern scholars. There are, however, great difficulties in this interpretation, and these have increased rather than diminished in recent years. Some of these are, indeed, not new, but occurred to the early students of Assyrian inscriptions. It seems not to be generally known that Sir Henry Rawlinson saw the necessity for assuming two western campaigns of Sennacherib, for he wrote: "Such is the account which Sennacherib gives of an expedition briefly touched on in a few verses (2 Kings 18. 13-16), an expedition which is not to be confounded with that second invasion of these countries by the same monarch, which terminated in the destruction of his host, and his ignominious flight to his capital. This latter expedition is not described in his annals, as it may perhaps belong to a period beyond the time to which they extend."¹

This view of Rawlinson found no acceptance when

it was first propounded, but there are now additional reasons for taking it up again. Those which appear to be the most important are the following: 1. Tirhaka cannot have been the leader of an army of Egypt and Ethiopia in the year 701, for he certainly did not come to the throne until some years later. And the representation of Tirhaka's advance, in 19. 7, 9, as a rumor which led Sennacherib to leave Palestine seems most improbable. 2. The passage 19. 35-37 dates the assassination of Sennacherib as following closely on his return from Palestine, though his death did not occur until 681, twenty years later than the campaign of 701. If we assume two campaigns of Sennacherib in the west, these difficulties vanish. Upon this theory the biblical sources may be analyzed as follows: The account of the first campaign ends with 2 Kings 19. 8 ("So Rabshakeh returned, and found the king of Assyria warring against Libnah; for he had heard that he was departed from Lachish"). We are not told what answer he had received from King Hezekiah, for the writer was not really interested in political affairs, but, rather, in the prophet Isaiah, whose life he was probably writing. With 2 Kings 19. 9 begins the account of the second campaign; begins, indeed, abruptly, for the introduction which it must have had originally has been left out by the redactor. According to this second account, which deals, ex hypothesi, with a second and later campaign into the west, he sent a letter from some unknown point demanding the surrender of Jerusalem before he should attack Tirhaka, who was advancing against him. On the advice of Isaiah, Hezekiah, the king, refused, and shortly thereafter pestilence fell on the Assyrian army, and Sennacherib was forced to withdraw to Assyria, where a few years later he was slain.

Upon this hypothesis the Sennacherib Taylor Cylinder refers to the first campaign of 701, and the small text (see below, p. 345) gives proof that Sennacherib really did make a later expedition into the west, while the tradition which Herodotus has preserved (see below, p. 346) of the destruction made by mice, the symbol of pestilence, fits well with the description of the plague in 2 Kings 19. 35.

During the campaign of 701 in the west a new rebellion began in Babylonia, in which Bel-ibni, the notorious Merodach-baladan, and a Chaldean prince, Marduk-ushezib, joined. When Sennacherib invaded the land in 700 the compact fell in pieces. Bel-ibni was captured and sent to Assyria, and Merodach-baladan died soon after his precipitate flight into the Elamitic coasts of the Persian Gulf. Sennacherib made his son, Asshur-nadin-shum, king of Babylon, and went away to carry war into Cilicia and Kappadocia.

The order which had been established in Babylonia was of short duration. The Chaldeans who had fled to Elam with Merodach-baladan had made so much trouble in Babylonia that Sennacherib, in 694, made a raid upon them in a campaign fraught with great difficulties. To revenge this the Elamites invaded Babylonia, plundered Sippar, and carried off Asshur-nadin-shum into a captivity from which he never returned. The Elamites then made Nergal-ushezib king of Babylonia. He was, however, able to hold only northern Babylonia, while the south was retained by the Assyrians. Sennacherib sent a column into Elam, and while he was there the Chaldeans seized the throne for Mushezib-Marduk, who was publicly proclaimed king in 692. He won the support of the entire land, and to his aid came also the Elamites, and the Chaldeans who had so long followed the fortunes of Merodach-baladan, and were now led by his son Samunu. In 691 Sennacherib met their combined armies at Khalulê, where he claimed a great victory.

In 689 Sennacherib, maddened by its long career of glory and of perfidy to the Assyrians, destroyed the city of Babylon.

In some year between 688 and 682 Sennacherib went westward into Arabia, and in 681 he was slain in the temple by his son or sons.

5. HERODOTUS ON THE CAMPAIGN OF SENNACHERIB ¹

The next king was a priest of Hephaistos, called Sethôs. This monarch despised and neglected the warrior class of the Egyptians, as though he did not need their services. Among other indignities he went so far as to take from them the lands which they had possessed under all the previous kings, consisting of twelve acres of choice land for each warrior. Afterward, therefore, when Sennacherib, king of the Arabians and Assyrians, marched his vast army into Egypt, the warriors one and all refused to come to his aid. On this the priest, greatly distressed, entered into the inner sanctuary, and before the image of the god bewailed his impending fate. As he wept he fell asleep, and dreamed that the god came and stood at his side, bidding him be of good cheer, and go boldly forth to meet the Arabian force, which would do him no hurt, as he himself would send him helpers.

Μετὰ δὲ τοῦτον βασιλεῦσαι τὸν ἱερέα τοῦ Ἡφαίστου, τῷ οἴνομα εἶναι Σεθῶν. τὸν ἐν ἀλογίῃσι ἔχειν παραχρησάμενον τῶν μαχίμων Αἰγυπτίων ὡς οὐδὲν δεησόμενον αὐτῶν, ἄλλα τε δὴ ἄτιμα ποίοντα ἐς αὐτούς, καὶ σφεας ἀπέλῃσθαι τὰς ἀρούρας τοῖσι ἐπὶ τῶν προτέρων βασιλέων δεδοσθαι ἐξαιρέτους ἐκάστῳ δνῶδεκα ἀρούρας. μετὰ δὲ ἐπ' Αἰγυπτὸν ἐλαύνειν στρατὸν μέγαν Σαναχάριβον βασιλέα Ἀραβίων τε καὶ Ἀσσυρίων. οὐκ ὦν δὴ ἐθέλειν τοὺς μαχίμους τῶν Αἰγυπτίων βοηθεῖν τὸν δ' ἱερέα ἐς ἀπορίην ἀπεληγμένον ἐσελθόντα ἐς το μέγαρον πρὸς τῷγαλμα ἀποθύρεσθαι οἷα κινδυνεύει παθεῖν· ὀλοφυρόμενον δ' ἄρα μιν ἐπελθεῖν ὑπνον καὶ οἱ δόξαι ἐν τῇ ὄψι ἐπιστάντα τὸν θεὸν θαρσύνειν ὡς οὐδὲν πείσεται ἄχαρι ἀντιάζων τὸν Ἀραβίων στρατὸν αὐτὸς γὰρ οἱ πέμψειν τιμωροῦς. τοῦ

Sethôs, then, relying on the dream, collected such of the Egyptians as were willing to follow him, who were none of them warriors, but traders, artisans, and market people; and with these marched to Pelusium, where the passes are by which the country is entered, and there pitched his camp. As the two armies lay here opposite one another there came in the night a multitude of field mice, which devoured all the quivers and bowstrings of the enemy and ate the thongs by which they managed their shields. Next morning they commenced their flight, and great multitudes fell, as they had no arms with which to defend themselves. There stands to this day in the temple of Vulcan a stone statue of Sethôs, with a mouse in his hand,¹ and an inscription to this effect: "Look on me and learn to reverence the gods."

time we find Sennacherib, who was the twenty-fifth at least in the succession of kings. He reduced Babylon beneath his sway. . . . [The following words properly belong at the end of the next passage, see below.] After him there ruled Nergilus, who was cut off by his son Adramelus. Adramelus was in turn killed by Axerdis, who was his brother on the father's, though not on the mother's side. He pursued the army to Byzantium and there shut it up.

After the reign of Sennacherib's brother, Akises became king over the Babylonians. He reigned less than thirty days, being murdered by Merodach-baladan, who then forcibly held the kingdom for six months. Baldanus [i. e., Merodach-baladan] was killed by a certain Elibus, who then became king. In the third year of the reign of Elibus, Sennacherib, king of the Assyrians, gathered an army against the Babylonians, defeated them in battle and ordered the captive king and his friends to be led into the land of Assyria. Having subdued the Babylonians, he set up his son Asordanius as king, withdrawing himself and proceeding to Assyria.

IX. ESARHADDON (680-668) AND ASHURBANAPAL (668-625)

Sennacherib had provided for the succession to the throne, while he still lived, by choosing Esarhaddon as the crown prince. The king's death may have been due to jealousy engendered by that choice, for such would be a natural Oriental sequence of the decree which elevated a younger son to the highest honors. Esarhaddon had been living in Babylon, and immediately on his father's assassination was there proclaimed king, but had to hasten to Nineveh to quell a rebellious effort to seize the throne. The king's murderers fled to Armenia,¹ and in a month and a half the rebellion was ended, and Esarhaddon was received as king.²

For our present purpose Esarhaddon is not of great importance. His points of historic contact with the west are few, and his influence upon the Hebrew people remote. The student of Hebrew politics has no great questions to raise in his reign, nor has he need to be disturbed by the great existing difficulty of arranging in chronological order the chief events of this reign.

At the very beginning of his reign Esarhaddon was busy with the reversal of his father's policy in respect of Babylon. He was engaged in the enormous task of rebuilding the temple of E-sagila—a work that was not completed until 668 B. C.

During the entire reign of Esarhaddon Judah made no move to regain the independence which Sennacherib had taken away. He had not, indeed, taken Jerusalem, but he had compelled the payment of tribute, and Esarhaddon enumerates Manasseh of Judah among his vassals. During the long reign of Manasseh there was, indeed, no opportunity for rebellion. The land was held in subjection by the fear inspired by Esarhaddon's campaigns against Sidon and against Egypt. The first works of war to which Esarhaddon gave his hand were in punishment of the Chaldeans, who had conquered in Babylonia as far north as Ur. These were speedily driven out and a new administration of affairs provided among them.

² Babylonian Chronicle, iii, 36-38.

But these enterprises among the turbulent Chaldeans were small indeed when compared with campaigns which followed speedily upon them. Sennacherib had set up a new province in Sidon, and so long as Ethobal lived, whom he had made king, the subservience to Assyria continued. His son Abd-milkot formed an alliance with two city kings inhabiting the Cilician highlands and suspended the payment of tribute. Esarhaddon set out for the west, and on his approach Abd-milkot fled to sea and left his city to its fate. The siege and the campaign against the allies of Abd-milkot lasted three years, and when the city fell it was savagely dismantled, its stones tumbled into the sea, and upon its site a new Assyrian city bearing Esarhaddon's name was erected and peopled by captives drawn from distant conquered lands. It was a piece of folly that could produce no enduring results; the ancient name of Sidon persisted in spite of Esarhaddon, and but for his boastful words the world had never known that Esarhaddon's-burg had ever occupied the site. But we must not fail to observe that such a castigation as Sidon had received would not be without influence in Judah. We shall not go far astray if we ascribe Manasseh's peaceful acceptance of Assyrian overlordship in part to the solemn warning of Sidon's example.

Esarhaddon was not so fortunate at Tyre, which he besieged for a series of years, but did not finally conquer, though his attack must have seriously injured the city's commerce. Tyre was never a menace to Assyria's growth in commercial or in political power, and Esarhaddon's only loss through the failure to reduce it was in the plunder which might have been secured.

Esarhaddon had now attacked two important Phœnician cities, but the real enemy of Assyrian progress in the west remained untouched. So long as Egypt was permitted to stir up at will the smaller western states to rebellion, just so long would Assyrian domination be in constant jeopardy. Esarhaddon conceived the colossal project of actually conquering Egypt and of adding it to the Assyrian empire. The accession of wealth thus to be gained would be enormous; the peace certain thus to be achieved in all the west might indeed tempt any monarch.

The first undertaking against Egypt took place in 673, and failed.¹ The Assyrians were defeated, and no allusion to their misfortune appears in Esarhaddon's inscriptions. The lesson of this failure was duly learned, for Esarhaddon began a most systematic approach upon Egypt by attacking and defeating its possible allies in Arabia and in the great deserts. In 671 Esarhaddon was ready to push boldly into Egypt, and in three successive battles Tirhaqa was defeated and the land as far south as Thebes was conquered. The whole campaign was a driving of Ethiopians out of Egypt and the changing of the overlordship of the ancient land from their hands to those of the Assyrians.

Immediately on the conclusion of the successful campaign in Egypt Esarhaddon had to quell a rebellion in Assyria, the cause of which is unknown.

Hardly had Esarhaddon left Egypt when Tirhaqa again entered it from the south and began a reconquest, and Esarhaddon, in 668, set out against him. From this expedition he never returned, but died on the long and toilsome march.

Before setting out for Egypt on the last campaign Esarhaddon had made a proclamation on the Feast of Gula (April, 668 B. C.) of his son, Ashurbanapal, as the next king of Assyria, and his younger son, Shamash-shum-ukin, as king of Babylon. This disposition of the kingdom was to be the beginning of the end of Assyrian power, though in the beginning it seemed on the surface to augur so well for peace. Ashurbanapal,¹ the Sardanapalus of the Greeks and Latins, and the Asnapper of the Old Testament, became king without a word of protest, as did also his brother in Babylon.

The first deed in Ashurbanapal's reign was to carry to a successful conclusion the campaign against Tirhaqa, on which Esarhaddon had died. By the end of 667 the land was once more in the hands of Assyrian governors. It was, however, much more difficult to hold than to conquer, and before 660 the great culture land of the Nile was once more ruled by an independent Egyptian king. The great tide of Assyrian power had begun to ebb.

Ashurbanapal's contact with the western countries was even less important than Esarhaddon's. Tyre early surrendered to him, and Ushu and Acco were punished.

During fifteen years the dual government went on peacefully, but in 652 Shamash-shum-ukin rebelled against his brother and a civil war of terrible vindictiveness began between Babylonia and Assyria. Assurbanapal triumphed, and in 648 his brother died by his own hand. Ashurbanapal became king of Babylon under the name and style of Kandalanu in 647. The campaigns between 647 and 640 were chiefly directed against kings and peoples of small moment, and no effort was made to extend the borders of the empire. From 640 until the end of his reign, in 626, Ashurbanapal was devoted to works of peace upon a scale unapproached by any previous Assyrian monarch. Temples, both in Assyria and in Babylonia, were rebuilt, renewed, or richly adorned by him. In these years Assyrian art touched a point attained by no other ancient Oriental people, while a great wave of ease, culture, and luxury swept over the kingdom. Greatest of all the works of Ashurbanapal was the library. The ancient archives of the two kingdoms were searched for books, and when interesting or important documents were discovered they were taken to Nineveh, there to be copied and annotated by the scholars of the court. The copies were preserved in the palace, while the originals went back to the place whence they had been borrowed. The library thus formed numbered not less than ten thousand tablets, and from its discovery comes a large part of our knowledge of Assyrian history, literature, and science. In the year 626 Ashurbanapal died, leaving behind him an empire stately and magnificent, but much diminished.

X. NEBUCHADREZZAR (604-562 B. C.)

Nebuchadrezzar became king by his father's sudden death, the news of which reached him while he was at the head of a victorious army on the borders of Egypt. Returning posthaste to Babylon, he was received as king without a sign of trouble, and began a reign as brilliant as it was long, and as powerful as it was brilliant. Unhappily, very few inscriptions have been preserved in which there are any accounts of his great military campaigns, the major part of them all being devoted to elaborate accounts of the building and restoration of temples, palaces, streets, and canals all over the country. The meagerness of native inscription material forces us to depend chiefly upon the narratives of the Hebrews for an account of the chief events of his reign.

Jehoiakim, king of Judah, had paid his tribute for three years after Nebuchadrezzar left the southern borders of his country for his hasty journey to assume the crown. He was then driven by a popular party, against the urgent advice of Jeremiah, to rebel and refuse longer to be considered a vassal king of the Babylonians. Nebuchadrezzar first let loose upon his land marauding bands of Syrians, Moabites, and Ammonites, and then, in 597, began a siege of Jerusalem. During its continuance Jehoiakim died, and his successor, Jehoiachin, was compelled to surrender the city, and, with eight thousand of his subjects, was carried into captivity. These men were settled, together with their families, in one great block by the river Chebar, a canal near Nippur. This deportation, though doubtless copied after the Assyrian usage, was not properly carried out. The Assyrians scattered their captives, so that they were rapidly assimilated by their neighbors and were deprived of all possibility of maintaining their old national life. These Jewish captives of Nebuchadrezzar were, on the other hand, enabled by their concentration to continue the offices of their religion, and by that means maintain their national exclusiveness. They soon became a thorn in Nebuchadrezzar's side, and so continued for a long period.

Meantime the government of Judah was placed in the hands of Mattaniah, son of Josiah, who was styled Zedekiah, and was sworn to obey Nebuchadrezzar. It is possible that he might have kept his oath but for the seductions of Hophra, king of Egypt, who had succeeded Necho II about 589, and was anxious to win back Syria for himself. Hophra roused to rebellion the states of Edom, Moab, Ammon, Tyre, and Sidon. These sent an embassy to Zedekiah asking his assistance, and soon Judah had cast its lot into the mad effort, despite the utmost efforts¹ of Jeremiah. In 587 the army of Nebuchadrezzar appeared, and the effort to starve the city by siege began. Soon after Hophra entered Palestine, and the Babylonians were compelled to raise the siege. The popular party which had driven the nation to war felt sure that this was the end and that victory was at hand. Jeremiah protested against this view in words of solemn weight: "Thus saith the Lord: Deceive not yourselves, saying, The Chaldeans shall surely depart from us: for they shall not depart. For though ye had smitten the whole army of the Chaldeans that fight against you, and there remained but wounded men among them, yet would they rise up every man in his tent, and burn this city with fire."² To those who trusted in Hophra his word was no less definite: "Behold, Pharaoh's army, which is come forth to help you, shall return to Egypt into their own land. And the Chaldeans shall come again, and fight against this city; and they shall take it, and burn it with fire."³ Men could not believe such a message as that in an hour of apparent hope, and the prophet was apprehended and cast into prison.⁴

The Babylonian army met the Egyptians somewhere south of Jerusalem and drove them back into Egypt, apparently without difficulty.⁵ There was no pursuit, but the siege of Jerusalem was resumed at once. Famine, and perhaps pestilence,⁶ assisted the besiegers, and on the ninth day of the fourth month (July), in the year 586, the Babylonians breached the walls and poured into the city. Zedekiah fled, but was overtaken in the plains of Jericho, captured,¹ and taken to Riblah. There Nebuchadrezzar slew his sons before him and then put out his eyes.

¹ Jer. 27. 1-3. The first verse in the Masoretic text reads: "In the beginning of the reign of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah." It is clear, however, from verses 2, 12, and 20 that the text is corrupt. It is omitted by LXX, which should be followed. See Giesebrecht on the passage.

The siege of Jerusalem had lasted a year and a half (587-586) and condign punishment was visited at once upon the city. Plundered of everything of value, it was given to the torch and a large number² of its inhabitants were carried away to join the former exiles in Babylonia. Over the poor who were left behind in the land Gedahiah, a descendant of the house of David, was made governor. Nebuchadrezzar had destroyed a rich province, which might have paid a great annual tribute into his coffers.

In 585 Nebuchadrezzar began a land siege of Tyre, which continued thirteen years (585-573) and ended in a truce, according to which Ethobal was to pay a tribute. It was impossible that Nebuchadrezzar should really conquer Tyre without a navy to blockade its port.

In 567 Nebuchadrezzar invaded Egypt, probably with the determination to punish its king for his interference in the affairs of Palestine and to prevent its recurrence in the future. But how complete was his success in Egypt we do not know.

Nebuchadrezzar based his chief claim to posterity's remembrance upon his great works of building all over Babylonia, but especially in Babylon itself. There Nabopolassar had begun to rebuild the city walls, but had only partially completed the work at his death. Nebuchadrezzar completed the inner wall Imgur-Bel and the outer wall Nimitti Bel, and constructed great city gates of cedar wood covered with bronze. Upon the east side of the city, at a distance of four thousand cubits from the outer wall, he built another massive wall. Before this was a great moat, basin-shaped, deep, and walled up with bricks like a quay. On the north, between the two city walls, and between the Euphrates and the Ishtar gate, was reared an artificial platform of brick laid in bitumen. Upon this he placed a citadel and connected it with the royal palace. This citadel made a watch tower, commanding the level country for several miles around, at the same time that it served to strengthen the walls.

¹ 2 Kings 25. 4, 5.

² The number carried to Babylonia is quite unknown. Guthe (Geschichte des Volkes Israel, pp. 236, 237) estimates the total number at 36,000 to 48,000, which he counts as a quarter or eighth of the whole population.

Within the city was beautified; the street of Ai-iburshabu increased in height, leveled and repaved; the palace rebuilt upon a scale of magnificence unheard of before. He may well have felt and spoken as the Hebrew book records: "Is not this great Babylon, that I have built for the house of the kingdom by the might of my power, and for the honor of my majesty?"¹

¹ The inscription is found in a valley of the Lebanon called Wady Brisa. It was first published by Pognon, Les inscriptions babyloniennes du Wadi Brissa (Paris, 1887), and much corrected and improved by Stephen Langdon, Les inscriptions du Wadi Brissā et du Nahr el-Kelb (tiragā à part du Recueil de Travaux relatifs à la Philologie et à l'Archéologie égyptiennes et assyriennes, vol. xxviii. Paris, 1905), and re-published after a study of the original by F. H. Weissbach, Die Inschriften Nebukadnezars, ii, im Wadi Brissā und am Nahr el-Kelb (Leipzig, 1906). The passage here given from col. ix appears in Weissbach's edition on Plate 38f., and the translation on p. 31. (22) A great wall, which like a mountain (23) cannot be moved, (24) of mortar and brick (25) I built, (26) with the moat which my father (27) placed (28) I joined it. (29) Its foundation upon the bosom of the abyss (30) I placed.

6. BEROSSOS ON THE NEO-BABYLONIAN PERIOD ¹

A little lower down Berossos adds what follows in his history of antiquity; I shall set down the words of Berossos, which are as follows: When Nabopolassar, his father [i. e., of Nebuchadnezzar], had heard that the satrap whom he had set over Egypt, and over the regions of Coele-Syria and Phœnicia, had revolted from him, being unable himself to endure the fatigue, committed certain parts of his forces to his son Nebuchadnezzar, who was still a young man, and sent him against the rebel.

Nebuchadrezzar joined battle with him, conquered him, and reduced the land at once to his dominion. It so happened at this time that his father fell ill in the city of Babylon and died, having reigned twenty-one years. When Nebuchadrezzar heard, not long afterward, of his father's end, he set in order the affairs of Egypt and the rest of the district, and committed the captives which he had taken from the Jews, Phœnicians, and Syrians, and from the nations belonging to Egypt, to some of his friends, that they might conduct the heavy-armed troops and the baggage to Babylonia, while he himself pushed over the desert with but a few to Babylon. When he arrived there he found that public affairs had been managed by the Chaldeans and the kingdom preserved by the principal persons among them, so that he was now ruler of all his father's dominions, and ordered the captives, when they arrived, to be assigned dwelling places in the most convenient parts of Babylonia.

XI. NABONIDUS, BELSHAZZAR, AND CYRUS

Immediately upon the death of Nebuchadrezzar his son, Amel-Marduk,¹ the Evil-Merodach of the biblical writers,¹ ascended the throne and assumed the impossible burden of sustaining the vast empire which a great political and military genius had built up. The one event of his reign which has survived in the memory of man is preserved by the Hebrews alone.² He set Jehoiachin free—an act which indicates a policy directly opposed to that of his father. With this accords perfectly the reference of Berosos, who says that he ruled unlawfully and tyrannically.³ He was assassinated and his brother-in-law, Nergal-shar-usur (i. e., “Nergal protect the king,” Gr., Neriglissor), became king. He seems to have endeavored to follow closely the example of Nebuchadrezzar, whose daughter was his queen, and his inscriptions even imitate the phraseology of his great exemplar. He devoted himself largely to building and to restoration. Of the outer and larger politics of his reign we have only the hint that the relations of Babylon to Media were strained, and that the Medes pressed into the northern part of the valley and took Harran.

In 556 Nergal-shar-usur died, and his son, Labashi-Marduk, while still a youth, came to the throne. He was assassinated after but nine months of a precarious tenure of the throne, tradition alleging that he had displayed evil traits of character.⁴ We may perhaps discern in this simply an excuse to justify his violent removal as a part of a priestly plot to win the throne. The supposition finds a justification in the appearance as king, not of a Chaldean, but of a man of Babylonian origin, Nabonidus, whose whole reign is a continuous manifestation of interest in all things priestly and religious.

² See passage just cited.

³ ἀνόμως και άσελγώς. Berosos, in Eusebi Chronicorum Liber Prior, ed. Alfred Schoene, col. 50.

⁴ Says Berosus, διὰ τὸ πολλὰ ἐκφαίνειν κακοήθη.

Nabonidus (Babylonian, Nabu-na'idu, i. e., "Nabu is glorious") was the son of Nabu-balatsu-iqbi, and must have occupied a distinguished position in the kingdom before he ascended the throne. Like Nebuchadrezzar, he was a great builder, but unlike him by far the greater portion of his labors was given to the reërection of temples. Nebuchadrezzar had constructed palaces, laid out great streets, erected immense walls of defense. It was the glory of Nabonidus to see that gods dwelt more magnificently than men, and that ancient shrines fallen into ruin should arise in a grandeur far exceeding the glory of earlier days. Other kings had been content when rebuilding fallen walls of temples to clear away the rubbish to the ground, leveling off a surface higher than it had been and then building upon it. Nabonidus was not content with work of that character. He must dig down until the earliest foundation stones were discovered. If the temple had been several times rebuilt it interested him to have the records of the several kings who had worked upon it recovered. To this religious, and, if one might so say, archæological, passion we owe much of our knowledge of early Babylonian history, for he had all these records read to him as they were found, and his own inscriptions carefully preserve the accounts of those who had built before him. No longer are building inscriptions dreary wastes of boastful words recording the erection of walls "mountain high," they are now decorated with the names of mighty kings of the distant past, whose honor Nabonidus was proud to record, as he linked his own name with theirs.

To us the archæological researches of the king are not merely interesting; they afford us in some instances our only means of restoring kings of bygone days to their proper place in history. But devotion to the gods and a passion for archæological learning seem to have worked ill for kingcraft. He was not building walls of defense, as had Nebuchadrezzar; he was not making an army, as had Nabopolassar. The slow growth of a mighty new power beyond his eastern borders made no impression on his absorbed mind. He had no political insight and could not see that the new power would soon be strong enough to covet his dominions and to take them. When Cyrus had driven the Medes out of Harran, Nabonidus glories in the "young servant of Marduk,"¹ as he calls him, but does not see that this young servant of Marduk would soon be driven by his own destiny and growing ambition to become his enemy and successor. On the contrary, Nabonidus brings an army to rebuild the temple in Harran, and lays his whole empire under tribute to pay the cost while he glories in the deeds of those whose royal hands had laid its early foundations.

Nabonidus lived in Tema, a place whose insignificance had given it no other mention in the annals of his country. There we can imagine him absorbed in great plans for temple building and restoration and engrossed in the work of his historiographers, who brought him their calculations of the dates when other kings had lived.

The affairs of state, the command of the army, the administration of public affairs had all fallen into the hands of the king's son, Belshazzar (Babylonian, Bel-shar-usur, "Bel protect the king"), who ruled in his father's name and enjoyed his confidence and affection.

Nabonidus seems to have neglected Babylon in very large measure. He calls himself, indeed, by the official title borne by former kings, "Preserver of Esagila and Ezida," but his concerns were evidently elsewhere. In the ancient city of Sippar he razed to the foundations the remains of the temple of the Sun (Shamash), which had been restored but forty-five years before by Nebuchadrezzar. There he found the very lowest foundation stone, on which his savants read the name of Naram-Sin, who lived, as their records showed, thirty-two hundred years before.¹ Upon that exact spot the new foundations were laid and above them rose a new temple far more splendid than the former. For its roof no less than five thousand cedar beams were brought from the far-distant northland, while yet others were required for its massive doors.

At about the same time he reconstructed the temple of E-ulbar, the shrine of the goddess Ishtar-Anunit. There he did not find the earliest foundation, but contented himself with one laid only eight hundred years before his time.

While all these works were in progress another people, fresh and vigorous, untainted by the decay which civilization has often brought, were preparing to undo this splendor and possess the wealth and power which Nabonidus had inherited or amassed.

The beginnings of new powers in the world's history are usually obscure, and to this rule the rise of the great people who were to engulf Babylonia is no exception. But certain lines in the great movement are sufficiently clear to be traced with some certainty. The fall of Nineveh was brought about by the alliance between the Medes and the Babylonians, but it was the former who struck the fatal blow. The leader of this new Median state was Cyaxares (Uvakhshatara), whose reign lasted until 585 B. C. It was he who really made the name of Medes a terror over all western Asia. It is difficult to follow his course, for the people whom he led were men of action, not writers of tablets, like the Babylonians. We can, however, see them possessing all Assyria after Nineveh was laid waste, and with it the whole of the great northern valley between the Tigris and Euphrates, including those Babylonian cities which had acknowledged the Assyrian overlordship. By 560 their dominion was acknowledged as far west as the Halys, which separated them from the kingdom of Lydia, over which Cræsus, of proverbial memory, was now king (560-546 B. C.).

While these conquests were proceeding, and the world seemed ready to bow down at the feet of the overpowering Medes, there had been born in Anshan, as the son of Cambyses, the boy Cyrus, who grew to manhood as king of Anshan, and as a tributary prince beneath the authority of Astyages, king of the Medes. It was impossible that a man such as he should long remain beneath the sway of another. In 553 he arose against Astyages, and, according to the story which Nabonidus has preserved for us, Astyages was delivered bound into his hands by his own treacherous troops. In 550 Cyrus took Ecbatana and sacked it, and brought there to an end the Median power. The Persians under Cyrus now fell heir to all that the Medes had won, and in 549 turned against Cræsus, who was taken in 546. The Lydian empire was now also brought under Persian control, and before the end of 545 the entire peninsula of Asia Minor was a part of the new Persian empire, divided into satrapies and governed with a strong hand. Even the isles of the sea began to give submission to the power that had in a night strode out of the unknown wilds of Asia and broken rudely upon the dreams of the Greeks, not only in the islands, but even in the peninsula itself.

Cyrus had now prepared the way for the absorption of Babylonia, with its valuable possessions in Syro-Phœnicia along the Mediterranean coast. While these far-reaching conquests were awaking alarm, even in distant Greece, Nabonidus was paying no heed, busily absorbed as ever in the building and restoring and exploring for ancient foundation stones. The record of his fatuous course is written in the sententious phrases of the Babylonian Chronicle, which record his residence in Tema. In 549, when the Lydian king was full of preparations for the struggle which he knew to be inevitable, Nabonidus was in Tema. In 547 he was still in Tema, and did not even enter Babylon to pay reverence at the great shrine of the gods, or to direct the urgent affairs of state. On the fifth day of the month of Nisan the king's mother died at Dur-Karasu, on the Euphrates above Sippar, and for her a great mourning was made. But on that same day Cyrus crossed the Tigris below Arbela and entered Assyria. Belshazzar was in northern Accad with an army, and on him were such hopes of defense as the country may have felt.

The Chronicle is now badly broken, as an examination of the copy¹ will show, and we are not able to follow the events from year to year. When next the narrative is resumed the year 539 has been reached and Nabonidus is busy removing gods from their shrines to Babylon. In that same year Cyrus met Belshazzar at the canal of Salsallat, near Opis, and defeated him. On the fourteenth day of Tammuz, Sippar was taken without a blow, and two days later the van of the army of Cyrus entered Babylon as the gates swung open without resistance¹ to receive it. Cyrus was not in command, but had remained behind, while Ugbaru (Goburyas), governor of Gutium, led the advance. Nabonidus was taken prisoner in the city. Cambyses, son of Cyrus, seems to have been called king at first, but Cyrus himself was later called king of Babylon, "king of lands."

IV. THE CODE OF HAMMURAPI

In December, 1901, and January, 1902, M. J. de Morgan, while excavating the acropolis of Susa, found among the debris three large fragments of a block of black diorite. They fitted perfectly together, and when joined formed a stele 2.25 meters high and tapering from 1.90 to 1.65 meters. At the upper end of the front side was a bas-relief representing the seated sun god Shamash presenting the code of laws to Hammurapi. The bas-relief measures .65 meters in height by .60 meters in width, and is finely executed in the hard stone.

The inscription begins immediately below the relief and is the longest cuneiform Semitic inscription which has yet been recovered. The inscription is carried belt-wise around the stele in parallel columns, and the reader was therefore required to turn his head downward and sidewise toward the left in order to read the inscription. On the front side there are still preserved sixteen columns, the lower five additional columns having been chiseled off and the stone repolished, evidently with the purpose of cutting another inscription upon it. On the reverse twenty-eight columns are preserved, with some slight breaks due to the chipping of the surface. When complete the entire inscription is estimated by Johns to have contained "forty-nine columns, four thousand lines, and about eight thousand words."

The stele was originally set up at Sippar, and was carried thence, probably as a trophy, to Susa, but by what Elamite monarch is not known to us. There was also found at Susa a large fragment of a duplicate.

The Hammurapi code exerted a great influence in the ancient Orient, and the scribes of Ashurbanapal made copies of the laws, either from the exemplar now recovered or from some one of its duplicates, and formed a series which they denominated Dinâni ša Hammurapi, that is, the judgments of Hammurapi. These copies have unfortunately not come down to us intact, but fragments of them were discovered before the code itself and were not immediately recognized. The first fragments brought to light were found in the British Museum and published by Dr. Bruno Meissner.¹ When he later published some old Babylonian Private Laws² he recognized that the Assyrian scribes had copied from some document or documents in the old Babylonian period. Meissner's texts were carefully reviewed and retranslated by Professor Delitzsch, who definitely applied to them the name Code of Hammurapi, a deduction which was splendidly verified in a few months by Morgan's discovery. When Professor Scheil worked over the code he recognized the sections of Meissner's copies as being a part of the original code, and showed that they give some assistance in the restoration of the five columns which the Elamites had chiseled off the stele.

¹ In comparing translation and transliteration the numbering of the lines is to be taken merely as generally indicative of location, and not as exact. The order of words in Babylonian is so different from that of English that to make an exact correspondence would have produced a strangely pedantic effect. It is hoped that the numeration will serve its practical purpose.

THE CODE

I. INTRODUCTION: EVIDENCE AND DECISION

(§§ 1-5)

§ 1. (26) If a man have accused a man and laid a capital charge upon him and (30) have not justified it, he that accused him shall be put to death.

§ 2. If a man have laid (35) suspicion of sorcery upon a man and have not justified it, he upon whom the charge of sorcery is laid shall go to the river-god, (40) he shall plunge into the river-god, and if the river-god overcome him, he who accused him (45) shall take to himself his house. If the river-god have declared that man to be innocent and have saved him, (50) he who accused him shall be put to death. He who plunged into the river-god shall take to himself (55) the house of him who accused him.¹

§ 3. If a man in a case (pending judgment) have come forward as a witness, (60) concerning a crime, and have not justified the word that he has spoken, (65) if that case be a capital suit that man shall be put to death.

§ 4. If as witness [Column VI] (1) to corn or money he have lied, (5) he shall himself bear the sentence of that case.

¹ This was a form of ordeal—a method of detecting criminals widely spread in antiquity. See, for example, Potter, Greek Antiquities, i, p. 352, and Brand, Popular Antiquities, ed. Bohn, iii, 351.

§ 65. If the gardener have not properly tilled the garden, and have diminished the produce, he shall measure out the (75) produce of the garden on the basis of the [Column XVII] (1) adjacent gardens.

At this point five columns of the text have been erased (see above, p. 396), only the beginnings of column XVII being now visible. Scheil estimates the portion lost at about thirty-five sections, and this is probably approximately correct. The sections omitted contained the further enactments concerning gardening, concerning houses let to tenants, and concerning the relations of merchants and tenants, which continue on the obverse of the monument. The missing portions may be partially restored from some duplicate fragments and from the later Assyrian copies. The numbering of them is, however, extremely doubtful. I have marked them simply by the letters of the alphabet, and have begun again with § 100 when the original begins. The number 100 is, of course, doubtful, though it is surely approximately correct.

EPILOGUE

[Column XXIV, r.] (1) The righteous laws, which Hammurapi, the wise king, (5) established, and confirmed to the land a just law and a gracious rule. Hammurapi, (10) the perfect king, am I. The people,¹ whom Ellil presented to him, and whose rule Marduk gave me, (15) I was not careless of them, nor was I neglectful.

A dwelling place of peace I provided for them. (20) I opened up difficult barriers, I made the light to stream over them. With the powerful weapon which Zamama and Nana (25) entrusted to me, with the keenness of vision which Ea assigned me, with the wisdom which Marduk gave me, (30) I drove out the enemies above and below, I made an end of fighting. To the land I brought prosperity, I made (35) the people to dwell in security, I suffered no disturber among them.

(40) The great gods have called me, and I am the shepherd that brings good, whose staff is (45) righteous, and my good shadow is spread over my city. In my bosom (50) I protect the people of Sumer and Akkad; under my protection I let their brethren (55) work in peace; in my wisdom I hide them, that the strong may (60) not hurt the weak, that orphans and widows may be protected in Babylon, the city of Anu and Bel may lift up (65) the head; in Esagila, the temple whose foundations stand like heaven and earth. (70) To pronounce the justice of the land, to decide questions, to right the wrong, my precious words have I written (75) upon my monument, and established them before my image as king of righteousness.

The king, who is (80) powerful among kings, am I. My words are well considered, my wisdom has not a the burdens of sovereignty, a life (60) like unto death may he fix as his destiny.

May Ramman, the lord of fruitfulness, (65) the prince of heaven and earth, my helper, deprive him of the rain from heaven, and the water floods (70) from the springs, destroy his land in hunger (75) and want, thunder furiously over his city and make his land (80) into heaps.

May Zammama, the great warrior, the first-born son of Ekur, (85) who goes at my right hand, break his weapons on the field of battle, turn his day into night, make (90) his enemy to triumph over him.

May Ishtar, goddess of battle and conflict, who takes hold of (95) my weapons, my gracious protector, who loves my reign, curse his dominion with great fury in her (100) angry heart and turn his grace (105) into evil. [Column XXVIII, r.] (1) May she break his weapons on the field of battle and conflict. (5) May she create disorder and rebellion for him; strike down his warriors and let the earth drink up (10) their blood. May she cast the bodies of his troops in heaps (15) upon the field. As for him, may she not grant him a life of pity, (but) give him into (20) the hand of his enemies, to bring him bound into the land of his enemies.

Conflict between a god, as the representative of Cosmos, and a horned dragon, as the representative of Chaos. In the early mythology it was Ellil who thus destroyed the dragon. In the later mythology it was Marduk who assumed this role, and when the Hebrews caught up these mythological ideas the role of destroyer was taken by Jahweh. See Psalm 89. 8-12, and compare Rogers, Religion of Babylonia and Assyria, New York, 1908, pp. 133, 134.

The original is in the British Museum. Limestone slabs, Numbers 28 and 29.

Seal Cylinders, which were used by the Babylonians to certify documents. The seal was rolled over the clay while still soft and left the impression which is here shown.

Figure 1. Babylonian cylinder seal of the reign of Ur-Engur, king of Ur about 2500 B. C. It is inscribed with an address to the king and with the name of its owner. The scene represents Sin, the moon god, seated, to whom a worshiper, probably Khaskamer, the owner of the seal, is being introduced. British Museum, Number 89,126.

Figure 2. Persian cylinder seal depicting Darius, king of Persia (521-485 B.C.), hunting lions in a palm plantation. Above is the emblem of the god Ahuramazda, and at the end is the king's name and titles in Persian, Susian, and Babylonian. British Museum, Number 89,132.

Figure 3. Babylonian cylinder seal, probably about 2500 B. C., inscribed with the name of Adda the scribe as its owner. On the left is the goddess Ishtar with a bow and at her feet a lion; between the mountains is Shamash rising, or setting. British Museum, Number 89,115.

Figures 2 and 3. Basalt statue of Shalmaneser III (859-825 B. C.), found by the Deutsche Orient Gesellschaft December 18, 1903, east of the zikkurat of the city of Asshur, the ancient capital of Assyria. When complete the statue measured about $2\frac{1}{2}$ metres in height. The beard shows well the typical Assyrian plaited treatment. The belt contains two dirks, and suspended about the neck is a cord with astrological symbols, of which we may still discern Shamash (the sun's disk with four cross-formed sun's rays and four narrow flames), the corona, and Ishtar (the sun's disk with eight rays). The text which covers the statue is translated on pages 298, 299.

PLATE NO. 31

Obelisk of Shalmaneser III (859-825 B. C.) found in the central building at Nimroud (Calah) and now in the British Museum. It is beautifully inscribed on all four sides with an account of the expeditions of the king during thirty-one years of his reign. On the four sides there are in all twenty small reliefs in five series, each series containing four portions of a scene representing the payment of tribute of a certain country. The relief at the top of each side forms one series, the second relief, on each side, forms another, and so on. The scenes are as follows.

1. The tribute of Shua of Gilzan.
2. The tribute of Jehu of the land of Omri (Israel).
3. The tribute of the land of Musri.
4. The tribute of Marduk-apal-usur of the land of Sukhu.
5. The tribute of Kalparuda of Patin.
